Search for sanctuary

From the explosion of wellness communities to a desire for simplicity, today’s consumers will interact with wellness in new and different ways – many of which will be outside the spa. Spa suppliers and operators must remember their roots to wellness of all kinds. We’re finding out more and more about the connections between mind and body, opening up space for spas to address mental wellness in a meaningful way (see page 79). And the things we’re learning about the skin biome (see our Spa Foresight™ section, page 18) are sure to change the “face” of skincare and treatments in the years to come.

But perhaps most interesting is the way in which technology is shaping our industry – and not just in the obvious ways. While AI (artificial intelligence) wellness consultants may be in our future (see page 82), we’re also seeing quite a backlash against our tech-obsessed, ‘always-on’ culture. Whether it’s silent spas; a lust for quiet, intimate ASMR therapies (see Spa Foresight™, page 20); or the need for simplicity (see Spa Foresight™, page 16), spas must understand that our role as sanctuary will be more essential than ever before, in this increasingly fast-paced world.

▲ Most people are unaware of the health risks of getting a tattoo.

GROWING MARKET

1. TATTOO DETOX

Concerns are growing about the safety of tattoo inks, which – in spite of the fact they’re injected into the body – are not yet governed by laws relating to toxicity.

Up to 20 per cent of adults in some Western nations are tattooed, with this rising to 35 per cent in the under-30s.

According to a recent report from the European Chemicals Agency (ECA), tattoo ink is thought likely to have a carcinogenic or mutagenic impact, as well as being implicated in reproductive disease, with red ink being the colour most likely to cause the biggest issues, according to ECA.

We think health-conscious consumers with tattoos will be increasingly interested in tattoo removal, coupled with chelation therapy to filter heavy metals from their body.

Spas are ideally placed to introduce both services, with healing and recuperation included, to create a full-service tattoo-removal programme.
TEETH

2. SPA DENTISTRY

Dentistry will undergo a revolution in the next 50 years, with 3D-printed tooth implants and stem-cell regeneration making existing procedures redundant.

These changes will create opportunities for spas to widen wellbeing services to include dental treatment, by investing in next-generation equipment and creating a role for holistic spa dentists.

It will be a great fit: a spa is the ideal setting in which to undergo hi-tech dental procedures, given the relaxing environments and exceptional levels of service.

These high-value dental treatments will create powerful additional revenue streams for spas from compact and affordable real estate footprints.

Dental health is an important part of wellbeing. Research shows poor dentistry contributes to a range of issues, including heart disease and autoimmune disorders, making effective interventions important for good health – while the cosmetic value of beautiful teeth has a powerful effect on self esteem and confidence.

We expect foresighted spa operators to make investments in dentistry part of their business development planning, and to begin to position for synergistic dental partnerships and acquisitions to take advantage of the radical changes that will reshape the market for essential and cosmetic dentistry in the coming decades.

Spas will develop a highly lucrative new area of business by moving into high-tech dentistry
STRATEGIES FOR COPING

3. GRIEF

Just as death is a taboo subject for many, so the challenge of supporting people who are grieving is something that many find difficult to discuss.

This creates situations where people can be grieving, and friends, colleagues and family are not equipped to offer support. They say nothing, for fear of saying the wrong thing and making matters worse.

Spas are well-placed to offer a sanctuary where grief can be expressed and both the grieving and their supporters can be taught strategies for healing. We expect life-changing interventions such as this to become part of the industry’s remit.

INFOBESITY

4. SIMPLICITY

In an always-on, increasingly complex world, simplicity is the new luxury.

More information is available to teenagers today than was available to the US president 20 years ago – and that overload is leading to ‘infobesity.’

Brain-drained consumers are tired of making decisions, and simplifying choices is key to making guests feel truly relaxed. This could translate to simpler spa menus, or consultations that point guests to treatments – no decision-making required. Spas have long provided calm, distraction-free spaces; guests will be looking for a less-is-more sensibility in other areas.

HEALING

5. THERAPY ANIMALS

Animal interactions have been shown to have positive effects on people’s physical health – lowering blood pressure, increasing endorphin levels, and decreasing the physical perception of pain. They’ve also been shown to positively affect mental health by decreasing anxiety, feelings of isolation and loneliness.

As spas seek ways to offer services in the area of mental wellbeing, we expect to see more use of therapy animals.

Spas such as Miraval, with its equine programme, are already using therapy animals to help guests gain greater self-awareness and experience personal growth. We think more spas – especially those with plenty of open space – could implement animal therapy programmes, and in the process, help bring joy and calm to their guests. And the PR angle is also powerful – who could resist the Instagrammable cuteness?
With the growing popularity of programmes like the Wim Hof Method, which advocates extreme cold exposure and advanced breathing techniques for health and resilience, we predict more consumers will warm to the idea of extreme cold if the health benefits are clearly explained.

Research shows that extreme cold exposure has a wide range of important effects, including speeding up metabolism by stimulating the creation of brown fat, reducing inflammation and strengthening the immune system. It’s also been shown to improve quality of sleep, boost the production of feel-good endorphins and have beneficial effects on the treatment of anxiety, depression and PTSD.

When it comes to implementation, extreme bathing services need to be carefully controlled to ensure safety, and we expect some spas to introduce medically supervised, Wim Hof Method programmes, with ice bathing pools and follow-up facilities for the “re-warming” phase of the treatment.

Other extreme bathing trends include geothermal saunas that pipe hot steam from the earth’s core, beach spas where holes are dug in the sand to create pools that fill with thermal water from natural springs and – in tune with the trend for forest bathing – woodland streams that are dammed to create bathing pools.
We’re forecasting an increasing interest in resilience and stoicism as people of all ages seek better ways to live and cope with the demands of life. Services in this area will include education, counselling and lifestyle interventions such as balanced exercise regimes that give an outlet for anxieties and relieve stress. Resilience will be especially important to Gen Z, many of whom are turning out to be troubled and fragile, as a result of being over-exposed to social media and adult content during their formative years – and with high levels of self harm and mental health issues.

The microbiome of the gut may have been getting all the attention from consumers, but the skin microbiome has its own unique combination of microorganisms that need to be kept in balance on a daily basis as well. Harsh cleansers, antibacterial soap, and a general modern obsession with being clean can get things out of balance, leading to skin conditions ranging from acne to eczema and psoriasis, as well as weakening the wider immune system. As consumers begin to understand the larger implications of this, expect to see more probiotic treatments, cleansers and creams, and look to incorporate them in your spa menu.

Spa operators will find an abundance of opportunity as the market goes mainstream.
Just as we have our own unique DNA, so natural thermal water has its own unique microfloral DNA – or mfDNA – that can be analysed and correlated to the health properties of waters from specific locations.

Now, a group of scientists, led by Dr Marc Cohen of RMIT University in Australia and Dr Vincenzo Romano Spica of the University of Rome, are working to map mfDNA across the world – and create a biofingerprint for each water source.

The biofingerprint will include details on the physical, chemical and biological makeup of the water. It has implications for practical things like hygiene, safety and quality, as well as management, but can also be used in marketing. By characterising hot springs water and identifying the benefits and best uses for each kind, Dr Spica hopes to help consumers find the best water for the treatment they need, and to increase personalisation.

He also hopes waters with different properties can eventually be named and marketed in the same way that wines are – creating the equivalent of champagne, Burgundy or Brunello spa waters, each unique in its particular qualities.

The mfDNA includes the physical, chemical and biological makeup of the water.
We’re noticing a growing number of organisations training people to become professional cuddlers. The approach is scientific and based on the power of touch. The movement is a growing one.

The aim is to offer a positive and platonic embrace, which releases oxytocin and leaves people feeling nurtured and connected. Cuddling sessions can be one-on-one with a professional therapist, or in groups with relaxation and breathing exercises. We expect spas to explore the introduction of cuddling as a service.

11. GLOBAL ONSEN

In 2015, nearly 20 million tourists travelled to Japan; the government hopes to double this by 2020. Japan is hosting the 2019 Rugby World Cup and the 2020 Tokyo Olympics and Paralympics, which has brought massive hotel development. This will mean an exposure to Japanese culture that will likely have a ripple effect throughout the world – including the Japanese onsen, or hot springs baths, which many of those new tourists will be exposed to for the first time. We anticipate seeing more onsen-like features in spa settings as both consumers and operators discover the peacefulness of Japanese bathing and adapt it to their own cultures.

12. CUDDLING

Quiet sounds – such as whispering or crinkling paper – can trigger an ASMR response

13. ASMR

Autonomous Sensory Meridian Response – or ASMR – is described as a pleasurable tingling that begins at the top of the head and radiates down the spine, and can be triggered by quiet sounds such as whispering, crinkling paper or the tinkling of wind chimes, or by gentle, light touches like hair brushing or skin stroking.

People are increasingly seeking out ASMR experiences, and YouTube is full of ASMR videos that use sound triggers. Whisperlodge Spa in New York City opened this year, where therapists blindfold guests and whisper in their ears, touch them gently with makeup brushes, crinkle tissue paper near their heads or even draw with charcoal alongside them to create that pleasant, tingly feeling. It’s all very quiet and intimate; trust of (and comfort with) a therapist is imperative. Feeling ASMR is said to be relaxing, de-stressing, and to lead to better sleep.

We’ve seen elements of ASMR being used in traditional spa environments – Comfort Zone’s sleep therapy treatment uses the gentle touch of brushes, for example – but more ASMR triggers could be brought into spas, especially as public perception and knowledge of it increases. If the popularity of YouTube videos is any indication of interest, get ready: we found one that had 2.6m views its first week.
Most people burn carbohydrates as fuel when exercising, but there’s an increasing interest in re-training the body to burn fat, which is a less limited fuel source.

The added advantage is that teaching the body to burn fat instead of carbohydrates leads to weight loss, which can give good outcomes if carefully supervised by expert dieticians.

The body can only store 1,600-2,000 calories from carbohydrates in the muscles, blood and liver, meaning exercisers who are instead fuelled by energy from fat stores – ketones – can go longer with the right training.

Exercise that is fuelled by ketones is an area of great interest to competitive sports people, some of whom have trained their bodies to achieve feats of great endurance on very small quantities of fat.

We expect interest in ketogenic exercise to grow among the general population as knowledge of these training techniques and dietary protocols trickles down from the elite athlete level to the mainstream.

This will create opportunities for spas to offer ketogenic conversion training and associated dietary advice to guests.

The spa is an appropriate environment in which to deliver this transformation, as it needs to be done carefully, given the implications for toxicity in the body and the fact that vital pH levels can be affected.

▲ Tour de France winner Chris Froome has adopted a ketogenic diet under the supervision of sport scientist James Morton

FITNESS TREND

14. KETOGENIC EXERCISE
More than 92 per cent of the world’s population is breathing air that fails basic health standards, according to a recently launched Air Quality Model from the World Health Organization. Indoor air is 14 times more toxic than outdoor. Plastic particles are also becoming a serious health issue, with water and air increasingly polluted and nanoparticles of plastic making their way into the food chain, and from there, into our bodies.

We predict that soon, each of us will wear a personal pollution sensor, which will go off when we enter an area or a building with high levels of toxins. We expect spa and wellness operators to install air and water filtering systems to make their facilities havens from pollution. Those who follow this route will find it’s a marketable driver for business – and those who don’t will risk consumers turning away from their operation.
Nootropics – a broadly defined group of substances that enhance cognitive capacity – are getting attention from people in business and academia. Nootropics can improve everything from mental focus to creativity and memory.

Things like caffeine and cocaine fall into this category, but we’re interested in the gentler, more natural (legal) varieties, which can offer increased brain power without causing negative side effects.

Nootropics have been used for centuries in traditional Chinese medicine and ayurveda, and consumer awareness is now growing in the West. We see a role for spas to offer nootropics as part of a brain-enhancement programme, with the spa acting as a trusted partner to offer quality ingredients with proven effects.

Spas that can create personalised programmes with a focus on individualised needs can take it a step further.

Six Senses is already working on a project that will use natural nootropics combined with a programme of breathing exercises, mindfulness and diet to focus on brain health and enhancement.

We predict nootropics will make their way into spa programming on many levels – from full-on brain enhancing programmes to supplements used during treatments – as consumer interest increases in this area of mind health.

Nootropics enhance cognitive ability and give spa operators the opportunity to offer customised prescriptions

We recommend developers and operators looking for future growth should be turning their longer-term ambitions towards the Stans – the central Asian nations of Kyrgyzstan, Turkmenistan, Takistan, Kazakhstan and particularly Uzbekistan.

Formed as republics under Stalin’s rule, these nations – with their wild and beautiful scenery, exotic culture and incredible architecture – gained independence 20 years ago and are now forging their own identities.

Oil-rich Uzbekistan has the second-fastest-growing economy in the world – projected at 7.6 per cent – as a result of rising oil prices, robust local growth and good relationships with its neighbours.

The country has a good climate range, and with Tokyo and Paris within an eight-hour flight, is well-positioned for major population centres. We think the Stans will catch people’s imagination when it comes to wellness travel, and are tipping them for growth.

Nose to toe massage: a new modality

Most massage protocols section the body into segments and work on these in isolation and in sequence, with no element of the treatment uniting the whole.

We see an opportunity to introduce a whole range of new holistic massage methodologies, based on fascial release, which treat the body as a whole, and follow the entire length of the fascia.

The head to toe massage, for example, would release the fascia down the entire length of the body, while working on the muscles in a smooth and continuous action. It would start at the eyebrows and extend over the top of the head, down the back and the legs, under the feet and back over the tips of the toes.

The treatment would be interactive, using neuromuscular release techniques, and ‘clench and release’ to unlock adhesions and rebalance the body. Front and sides would be addressed in a similar way.

Jane Kitchen outlines some of the world’s most interesting and significant spa projects that are planned for the coming years.

AFRICA

Fairmont Taghazout Bay
Agadir, Morocco
Opening: Q1 2019

Architecture studio HKS has designed the Fairmont Taghazout Bay, a 615-hectare (1,519-acre) seaside resort on the coast of Morocco in Agadir, drawing inspiration from the semi-nomadic Imazighen people, also known as the Berbers.

The resort’s spa garden will sit in a sunken oasis surrounded by a cluster of buildings inspired by a Berber village, where guests can receive different treatments. Facilities are to include a hydrotherapy pool, yoga deck and a Moroccan hammam.

HKS are working with interior designer Wimberly Interiors and landscape architects Scape Design Associates to create the 155-bedroom resort.

http://lei.sr?a=C3d7f_B
Spa consultancy Blu Spas has collaborated with HKS/Hill Glazier Studio and Brayton Hughes on the spa design at the upcoming Four Seasons Hotel Tunis in Tunisia.

Perched along the hillside of Gammarth, the 200-bedroom hotel combines Arabic-inspired architecture and Mediterranean influences, with a series of pools, gardens and fountains that echo the design of the historic medina.

Blu Spas first started work on the Roman-inspired spa almost 10 years ago; it will feature 15 treatment rooms, a spa salon, fitness studio, traditional garden and water courtyards, and a hammam.

“The project is located on a sandy site that steps down to the Mediterranean Sea and lies north of the ancient ruins of Carthage,” says Cary Collier, principal of Blu Spas.

http://lei.sr?a=F7n6S_B

Both the hotel and spa design will take direction from Tunisia’s rich and varied cultural history.
As part of its Nature Resorts brand, One&Only will open two hotels in Rwanda: One&Only Nyungwe House and One&Only Gorilla’s Nest. Located in Gisakura, a working tea plantation on the edge of Nyungwe National Park, One&Only Nyungwe House will offer a spa and fitness centre, with treatments honouring the resort’s surroundings by using traditional African elements and ingredients. In keeping with the brand ethos of being close to nature, treatments and yoga sessions will be made available outdoors.

One&Only Gorilla’s Nest will be located near the village of Kingi, in the foothills of the Virunga Volcano range, and will allow guests to discover and explore the habitat of mountain gorillas – enabled in partnership with local conservationists. No opening date has been set for Gorilla’s Nest, but it will house a spa and wellness element tailored to its surroundings.

Hotel Verde

Zanzibar

Opening: Q4 2017

Hotel Verde Zanzibar promises to be “Zanzibar’s greenest hotel” and will include environmentally friendly details like waterless urinals; steam generators and toilets operated by greywater; and sensitivity sensors in the sauna, steam room and hammam.

The water used in the spa will be recirculated for irrigation in the resort, says Martin Goldmann, managing director of spa consultancy ASPA International, who is spearheading the spa and wellness concept.

The spa will include thermal areas, a yoga space, mani-pedi area, a gym and kids’ gym, and an outdoor area. A Fountain of Youth and a Fountain of Life will offer opportunities for selfies, and take inspiration from Zanzibari folk tales. A garden sauna, made from solid logs, will add to the ambience. Goldmann is also creating a spa medina area, which will capture the feel of a North African market.

South Africa-based Verde Hotels will operate the property.

ESPA will manage the 1,950sq m (209,89sq ft) spa – its first in Qatar – offering separate spas for men and women, 12 treatment rooms, a heat experience garden and a Turkish hammam. All guests will enter through a pure white reception area, before embarking to their gender-specific areas.

Global spa management company Resense will manage a 1,540sq m (16,576sq ft) Kempinski Wave Spa, which is designed to envelop guests in natural elements through fresh colours and organic textures. Modular in design, the six-treatment-room spa can be fully separated between the men’s and women’s area, and the health club features a women’s-only gym. Separate male and female spas each have their own sauna, steam, experience showers and whirlpools, and a VIP treatment suite will have its own sauna and steam room. A men’s barber and a juice bar will also be on-site.

Yellowstone hot springs project
Paradise Valley, Montana
Opening: 2018

International spa and wellness consultancy Blu Spas is working on a project to develop a resort in Paradise Valley in Montana, close to Yellowstone National Park. The site is being developed at the Yellowstone Hot Springs, near the national park’s northern access, and is in the same location where the LaDuke Hot Springs and Corwin Hot Springs were popular resort and bathing destinations more than a century ago.

International hot springs and water experts are already working on the project, and Cary Collier, principal at Blu Spas, says an analysis of the waters shows they are comparable to the waters in the iconic spa town of Baden Baden, Germany.

The resort will include a variety of hot, warm and cool pools for community bathing as well as hot springs pool cabins for private bathing. Collier says the project will be the first of its kind in the US, and will also include water conservation efforts and unique eco-concepts.

Wellness 2020 ............................................................... p82

Driving Change ............................................................... p90
Living Well ................................................................. p98
Massage therapists in Africa were traditionally recruited from Europe or Thailand, but in recent years, high-quality massage training schools have opened in South Africa and in Nairobi, Kenya, so while European trainers are still brought in to share consumer trends and expectations, more Africans – mainly women – are training to be therapists.

There are now some highly skilled native African therapists who combine traditional intuition and healing massage practices with Western techniques, such as Swedish massage.

Safaris are big business and are becoming more linked with wellness. To enhance relaxation, many safari lodges have massage therapists in-house or on-call to provide treatments in guests’ rooms or outside, often overlooking majestic landscapes.

By its nature, a safari is healing – the word is Swahili for ‘journey’. Spending the day following the rhythms of nature, immersed in the habitat of awe-inspiring wildlife, de-stresses people in an instant.

In addition, a growing number of yoga instructors from around the world are organising their own groups to take on safari in sub-Saharan Africa, creating ‘yoga safaris’ that integrate a yoga retreat with a wildlife safari. This trend is sure to continue, and lodge and resort owners might consider adding space to their properties to accommodate the needs of yoga and meditation classes.

Some African skincare companies use traditional ingredients like African potato, marula oil, shea butter and rooibos, and their spa treatments incorporate ancient African rituals. For example, spas that are located in coffee-growing zones often utilise ground coffee in their spa treatments; African red clay is used for its healing properties; and traditional medicinal plants can be used for poultices. These authentic, local elements are all very popular with visitors, many of whom are keen to experience what makes African spa and wellness facilities different. The key is to marry these traditional medicines and rituals with the expectations of the modern spa client, and to tailor products to the ‘softer’ skin type of Western travellers, who are generally not so used to being exposed to rough outdoor conditions.

Businesses will succeed when they find ways to create products and treatments that are appropriate to the travelling client, without losing the essence and power of the traditional ingredients that make these treatments special and effective.

Ancient healers are also becoming more involved with wellbeing. It takes time to develop relationships with them so they come to trust ‘outsiders’ enough to share their ancient healing arts. I act as a ‘connector,’ linking these healers with spa and wellness programmes. I believe that so much more can – and should – be done to nurture these healers so they can share their powerful ancient wisdom and traditions with an increasingly unwell world.
Wellness tourism is a US$563bn industry and an integral component of the global wellness economy. But despite an annual growth rate of 6.8 per cent in wellness tourism, recent global political instability may have a negative impact on international visitors to many countries over the coming years.

Australia, however, is well-positioned to buck the trend. Not only is the country regarded as a safe destination for international tourists, but the potential growth in domestic wellness tourism as a result of fewer Australians travelling overseas can be a catalyst for national development and growth. The wine industry is an ideal partner; the cities of Adelaide, Melbourne, Sydney and Perth all have world-class wine regions within a few hours’ drive of large populations, and fantastic opportunities exist to develop wellness facilities and attract new tourists in these areas.

The foundations are in place for wine and wellness to be a success. Chinese tourists, for example, are not only the leaders in wellness tourism trips globally, they also recently became the largest export market for Australian wine. Wine may often be the key driver for the guest visit; however, strategically, there is an opportunity to work alongside one of Australia’s great success stories and develop further an already iconic industry while simultaneously making a positive impact on people’s lifestyles.

“There is an opportunity to work alongside one of Australia’s great success stories”

Neil Owen, director, Spa Vision
Tourists already flock to Australia’s wine country, which offers breathtaking vistas for wellness facilities.
The future is bright for the Middle East spa and wellness industry. The region holds some of the most luxurious and therapeutically designed facilities in the world, and hotel brands are positioning themselves within the wellness tourism industry. The UAE is fast becoming an authentic wellness destination, and the strength of the fitness, beauty, nutrition and spa markets in the region helps to underpin this growth.

In response to this growth, spa communities have been working together to support each other in an effort to spearhead collaboration and keep pace with changing market conditions. We have an established network of spa professionals that meets regularly and collaborates on industry-related issues. In 2015, we came together to organise the first-ever Middle East benchmarking system and report (see p 120) in partnership with Colliers International.

The industry is outpacing the supply of trained professionals. Spa operators in the UAE identified recruitment (68 per cent), training (20 per cent) and turnover (12 per cent) as their top challenges. The region is responding with a diversified recruitment platform reaching new regions such as Spain, the UK, South Africa and Portugal. Larger spa operations have strong internal platforms that support continued growth and retention. With brand awareness and reputation remaining the driving forces behind why guests seek out a particular spa, and quality and consistency being the two main reasons for them to return, the need for adequately trained and talented spa staff in the Middle East is becoming increasingly important.

“Japan has relatively low income differences, but people are beginning to realise that having a well life – or not – is one way to judge quality of life”

Yoriko Soma, president, Conceptasia

Japan’s population tree is ahead of any other developed country. Our ageing population problem is with us already, though Japan has long had the longest life expectancy for both women and men. All Japanese citizens are covered by health insurance which is provided by the government, but the health insurance schemes suffered a US$6bn deficit last year. The government is considering how to solve this problem.

One idea is to persuade people to care more about preventive medicine. This involves building a greater awareness of the importance of regular exercise, increased mental relaxation (taking more holidays), and regular health checks, as well as educating people about the problems caused by junk food.

Japan has relatively low income differences between rich and poor, but the Japanese people are beginning to realise that having a well life – or not – is one way to judge quality of life.

The millennial generation is not as big a market as in the US, due to the demographic differences – the population of Japanese in their twenties declines by 1 per cent each year. Millennials are largely ignored by Japanese companies who sell wellness and beauty items or services. On the other hand, women in their 40s and 50s lead the beauty and wellness industry, spending lots of money to maintain their beauty.

With an ageing society and a shrinking birthrate, the wellness and spa industry in Japan is focusing on wellness packages and tourism along with results-oriented services.

In 2019, Tokyo will host the World Rugby tournament, while the Tokyo Olympic Games takes place in 2020. Our country is ready to accept more sports and wellness and, though our people are ageing, there are still over 120 million relatively healthy and wealthy people, and a correspondingly large target market.
If you’re a spa owner, seeing steady growth in the number of spas adding eco-conscious equipment, products and practices to their brand is inspiring – but it’s also a trend worth emulating. Spa-goers understand why it makes sense to treat our planet with the same conscious care they bring to their wellness lifestyle. Connecting sustainable values with the spa experience earns your guests’ praise.

But to stop there would be passing on an important opportunity, because sustainability is more than just the right thing to do – it’s what spas have always been about.

As our industry evolves, success may become less about pioneering that next treatment trend, ancient art or mindful mantra, and more about rediscovering the gifts those healing roots offer. Getting back to the heart of spa and nature helps your guests find their quiet space – something they likely need now more than ever.

Whether through your spa’s architecture, design, services or staff’s calming presence, the profound simplicity of offering a green, quiet space will always be the strength and foundation of our industry.

Karen Short, board president, Green Spa Network

“The simplicity of offering a green, quiet space may be more important than ever
“There is a growing understanding that healthcare costs are escalating and that part of the answer lies in the bountiful resources provided by nature”

Mark Hennebry, board director, Danubius Hotel Group

The future of the geothermal spa and mineral springs industry is positive; for those of us who work in this sector, it’s self-evident. For our wider spa and wellness industry colleagues, this statement holds true based on similar factors happening throughout the sector.

There has been a groundswell of interest in health and wellness over the past number of years, but our guests have typically experienced spas in a hotel or day spa environment. As the beneficial health effects of geothermal and mineral springs are better understood, that guest interest is intensifying.

As just one example, the American College of Physicians recently issued new guidelines on non-invasive treatment of back pain, which includes recommendations for non-drug therapies such as heat, massage and multidisciplinary rehabilitation.

This helps bring the focus to geothermal spas and mineral springs – and the specific health and wellness benefits of bathing in mineral-rich waters. We’re seeing an upsurge in interest, specifically in Central Europe, where there is a long tradition, dating back centuries, of bathing in hot springs.

At the same time, guest behaviour is changing and demand for shorter stays is increasing. We’re already experiencing a shift away from two-week stays towards one-week stays and we anticipate that shorter stays will be in higher demand, particularly with a younger demographic. We already have short-stay offerings, but these need to be developed and extended to respond to a wider range of guest preferences.

Finally, there is also a growing understanding that healthcare costs are escalating beyond the ability of governments to increase the tax base to pay for these costs – and that part of the answer lies in the bountiful resources provided by nature.

There is an upsurge in interest in mineral-springs bathing
The spa industry has evolved at a rapid pace and innovation by companies not considered to be traditional spa outlets has been particularly interesting. I recently joined Equinox, a luxury fitness brand that uses spa to drive results and optimise health. Doing this well requires the creation of an ecosystem that eliminates the need to hard-sell spa services or wait for guests to come to you. This is done through clear messaging that underscores spa’s importance to the larger brand.

To move from amenity to necessity, spa offerings must be an extension of a brand’s positioning and value proposition. Offerings not synergistic with the larger brand point of view create dissonance and make it much more difficult to recommend with authority or appeal effectively to the target market in an innovative way.

Employing excellent technicians who are strong retailers and a good cultural fit is a given in the fitness world. They must view recommendations and long-term treatment plans as excellent guest service – not as an unwelcome sales technique.

Relationships are key. Building trusting relationships with guests means becoming an expert part of their high-performance lives. Just as importantly, spa service providers must cultivate partnerships with their colleagues in the larger organisation, working collaboratively with personal trainers and instructors.

In every successful scenario, there is a top-down commitment to spa and wellness offerings playing a critical role in what is happening holistically, and everyone who works at the organisation is walking that walk and talking that talk – not just the spa team.

“To move from amenity to necessity, spa offerings must be an extension of a brand’s positioning and value proposition”

Amanda Al-Masri, vice president of spa services, Equinox
Relationships are key, and gaining guests' trust is important for making recommendations.
The spa and wellness industry is exceptional at creating amazing experiences and improving the lives of our guests ... but are we equally good at taking care of our owners and investors? Guest focus is natural for spa and wellness people – their typically intuitive and kinaesthetic nature is often what attracted them to this industry. But for the same reason, ROIs, IRRs and KPIs are not always in spa managers’ comfort zones.

As the world becomes more competitive and our clients demand higher financial returns on their investments, how do we deliver?

Our industry continues to discuss – and even argue about – the benefits of KPIs and terms such as yield management. I believe the problem is that many – though not all – spa managers may have some difficulty relating these indicators to everyday business in their spas.

The reason we still argue about the benefit is that we’re viewing them as statistics, rather than indicators. KPIs are tools, and their relevance is how they intersect – and the better business decisions that can be made accordingly to optimise performance. For example, we often calculate treatment room utilisation, but how is that actually useful to the spa manager of an existing facility once it’s built? The intersection between therapist utilisation and bookings turned away is far more interesting for indicating rostering or scheduling deficiencies.

As spa experts, it’s our responsibility to provide the right training, and systems that don’t push square pegs into round holes, to equip our spa teams with simple, translatable business analysis and techniques that minimise costs, maximise revenue and ensure their assets perform well for their owners and investors.

"It’s our responsibility to provide the right training, and systems that don’t push square pegs into round holes"

Alexandra Charalampidou, director of financial performance, Resense
As recently as a few decades ago, it was thought that adult development largely froze in late adolescence and that any growth in mental and emotional capacity during adulthood was marginal. Subsequently, a wealth of neuroscience and cognitive research has shown this to be a serious underestimation of the potential for adults to continue their development throughout their lives. New findings on the connection between gut microbiota and the brain has given rise to the term ‘gut-brain axis’ and nutritional and probiotic solutions to mental health and wellness are currently being studied.

New evidence suggests that the shortening of our telomeres across the lifespan can be reduced and that we can actually increase their lengths. Telomeres are the caps on our DNA, which are shortened by stress, inflammation and ageing, leading to cellular degeneration and a shortened lifespan, resulting in conditions such as cancer and depression.

Strategies for lengthening telomeres include a healthy and anti-inflammatory diet, regular exercise, clean air and healthy sleep, alongside the mental paths of positive thinking, gratitude and mind-body techniques such as meditation, yoga or qigong, as well as a supportive and nourishing social environment.

Regular connection with nature has been shown to increase mental wellbeing and research on ‘earthing’ has found that having the feet in contact with the earth is associated with enhanced immune functioning, wound healing and the prevention and treatment of chronic inflammatory and autoimmune diseases.

An exciting picture is emerging from this broad-spectrum view of paths to mental wellness. The most microscopic levels of our lives – our telomeres, the microbes in our gut and their influence on our brain – through to the effects of inner development techniques, such as meditation and the influence of our social environment, all are available as a portfolio of pathways to mental and physical wellness.

The benefits of halotherapy

True halotherapy disperses salt in the form of a dry aerosol, which makes it easier to absorb through the skin or inhale into the lungs. Steve Spiro, founder at Global Halotherapy Solutions, explains more.

Halotherapy, the use of salt vapours to treat respiratory problems, skin complaints and stress issues, is often confused with Himalayan salt therapy. While similar in concept – both use salt for therapeutic benefit – the therapies are completely different in execution. Himalayan salt treatments involve exposing users to salt through a salt wall or salt crystals. This kind of salt therapy does have some benefit, but is thought to not be as effective as halotherapy.

Halotherapy, however uses a halogenerator, a machine that crushes salt and disperses it in the form of a dry aerosol. This allows the salt to be absorbed into the skin and inhaled into the lungs, where it can deliver the most benefit.

Benefits of halotherapy

When inhaled as an aerosol, salt can ease the symptoms of chronic respiratory problems, including chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, bronchitis, cystic fibrosis, asthma, sinusitis, hay fever and other airborne allergens. It can also ease the symptoms of acute or chronic respiratory illnesses, viral infections and chronic, ear-nose-and-throat illnesses.

Halotherapy can also be used to treat skin conditions, including acne, psoriasis and eczema. Aerosolized salt has both antibacterial and anti-inflammatory properties that can reduce swelling and redness, prevent acne from forming and provide relief from irritation.

Other reported benefits of halotherapy include increased energy levels and mental alertness, and a reduction in stress levels and headaches.

“Halogenerators produce halotherapy by crushing pure, pharmaceutical salt into micro-particles that go deep into the lungs and on the skin,” explains Steve Spiro, founder and managing partner at Global Halotherapy Solutions (GHS). “Without a halogenerator, it’s just not halotherapy.”
Halogenators produce halotherapy by crushing pure, pharmaceutical salt into micro-particles that go deep into the lungs and on the skin.

The Halo FX can be used in massage rooms, lounge areas and movement studios, making it ultra-versatile.

The latest technology

GHS has recently launched the Halo FX, a sleek, lightweight halogenerator that provides an authentic halotherapy experience. The Halo FX has a small footprint, is easy to install and features a number of different settings. It has also been certified by Underwriter Laboratories (UL), an American company that ensures safety standards in electronics.

“The Halo FX can be put into massage rooms or lounge areas, or movement studios,” says Amy McDonald, spa and wellness advisor at GHS. “This allows operators to use the space available to earn revenue, and offer classes in a room that has the added health benefits of halotherapy.”

GHS offers pre-built salt cabins, booths, beds and the low-priced, portable HaloFX Mini, which features shorter treatment times – perfect for time-starved clients – and requires no additional labour to operate to earn incremental revenue.

10 wellness predictions for 2020 – and beyond

Marc Cohen, who leads the Wellness Discipline, School of Health and Biomedical Sciences, at RMIT University in Melbourne, Australia, outlines his predictions for the future of wellness – and the implications for spas.

It is always treacherous to make predictions and, in a world where change is occurring at such a rapid pace, the only certainties are that the future will be radically different and that any current forecasts are likely to flawed.

Dramatic shifts in human demographics, climate and computer intelligence, together with new technological innovations, renewable energy systems and unprecedented human connectivity, will combine to create a future that’s far beyond the realms of our current thinking.

However, though predictions are difficult to make, the following list is based on current trends that are likely to continue into the near future and impact the spa and wellness industry by presenting opportunities and challenges that spa owners and operators may benefit from considering.

1. AI CONSULTANTS & VIRTUAL WELLNESS

   Artificial intelligence will evolve to create personal AI wellness consultants that design programmes informed by vast data sources, including genetic, microbiome, biosensor, psychometric, geographical exposure and social-connection data.

   Virtual reality will also move into the wellness world with virtual experiences and getaways to exotic locations, both real and imaginary. Together, virtual reality and AI will power immersive games using real-time biometrics that take us places we have not yet imagined.

   This will provide spas with the opportunity to create unique experiences and treatments based on guests’ personalised data. It will challenge spas to adapt their wellness offerings to VR environments and it will also challenge spas to provide exhilarating and nurturing real-world experiences that can compete with VR experiences available elsewhere.

2. THE POCKET LAB

   The power of smartphones will be leveraged to revolutionise personal medical testing. Sophisticated technologies – currently only available in specialised labs with multi-million-dollar equipment – will become available to everyone, at minimal cost. Expect to see new low-cost nano-biosensors and devices that collect and analyse our blood, urine, sweat and tears, and measure the quality of our food, water, environment and overall health.

   This will provide the opportunity for spas to compete with conventional medical services and offer evidence-based services that positively impact guests’ health metrics. Personal wellness metrics will also challenge spas to monitor their guests’ wellbeing and response to treatments, as well as to interface with existing and future medical data and record-keeping systems.
The appeal of ‘deep nature’ – far away from everyday influences – is increasing.
As people move into a virtual, technology-driven world, they will increasingly seek down-to-earth experiences inspired by indigenous wisdom and cultures. Expect to see a rise in shamanic practices that use traditional foods and plant-based medicines, such as medicinal marijuana and ayahuasca (an Amazonian ceremony brew used as a traditional spiritual medicine), along with a resurgence of ancient rituals such as sweat lodges, chanting, drumming and ecstatic dance.

The inclusion of such practices presents an opportunity for spas to create safe spaces for guests to experience extreme emotional catharsis and deep personal transformation. Spas will have to provide therapists who are skilled in dealing with intense situations and coping with potential adverse reactions. Challenges around legal and licensing issues, and issues of cultural appropriation and authenticity, could also arise.

The value of pure flowing water will increase and become recognised as a wellness resource. People are now realising their drinking water is often contaminated with heavy metals, pesticides, pharmaceutical drugs and other industrial contaminants. Expect to see smartphone compatible water-test kits; new water harvesting, filtering and purification technologies; and more attention to water quality in food outlets, bathing facilities and wellness locations.

An emphasis on water as a wellness resource provides opportunities for spas to promote the unique qualities of their water and deliver on the promise of ‘health through water’. It also challenges spas to seize a leadership position in regard to water quality and reduce the use of pollutants by measuring, monitoring and managing the quality of the water used in their facilities and communities.

Air quality is becoming an increasingly important issue, both locally and globally. Air quality is vital for optimal health and brain function and – as more people realise that traffic pollution kills more people than traffic accidents – we’ll see more people vacating cities to escape the toxic air. Also expect to see new air-filter technologies, indoor air quality meters and metrics, and fitness centres and other wellness locations that highlight air quality in their offerings.

Awareness of air quality provides an opportunity for remote locations that offer fresh air to capitalise on this precious resource, and will challenge urban spas to provide fresh air havens using the latest air-purification technologies. It will also prompt spas to consider going beyond aromas and signature smells, and move to design treatments around specific air-quality measures.
Wellness will become increasingly political, with governments taking up the challenge to effectively measure and administer wellbeing and align policies with human health, rather than economic health. This is likely to play out in levies on sugar, alcohol, tobacco and fast foods, and policies around health and wellness insurance, workplace wellness incentives, vaccines, food labelling and environmental pollutants.

The politics of wellness provides an opportunity for spa services to become incorporated into workplace wellness programmes, government health insurance schemes and community-based health programmes. Spas can also try to enhance the quality of political decisions by championing the inclusion of wellness activities and experiences in the political process – and engaging politicians in nurturing their own wellbeing.

Wellness is about ‘we’ not ‘I’. With most people owning a connected mobile device, we can expect to see a surge in social media use and peer-to-peer initiatives that harness geographical information systems, sensor technologies and cloud-computing platforms. This leads to crowd-sourced and crowd-funded wellness maps that transcend political boundaries, highlight resource gradients and hold corporations and governments to account.

A greater reliance on crowd-based information will extend platforms like TripAdvisor and create opportunities for spas to expand their client base and engage in more meaningful dialogues through crowd-sourced treatments and viral wellness campaigns. This will challenge spas to interface between communities, corporations and governments, and promote trends that foster a global wellness culture.

Waking up to wellness

Africa has flown under the radar in the spa industry, but with many countries now focused on health and wellness tourism, that’s about to change. Elaine Okeke Martin tells us more

There’s an energy you feel in Africa from the light, the earth, the air, the rain – and you really feel alive when among lions. Africa can offer guests spa treatments while they look out to elephants grazing the trees.

One to watch
South Africa, Egypt, Mauritius, Kenya, Morocco and Tanzania all have well-established spa industries, but Kenya is one to watch; it has a government goal for 2030 that includes a budget dedicated to medical and wellness tourism. The Kenya Tourism Board has recently launched a joint venture with Kenya Airways to promote the country, and Kenya’s largest infrastructure project since independence in 1963 – a US$3.8bn Chinese-built high-speed railway, the Madaraka Express – has just launched, connecting the port city of Mombasa with the capital of Nairobi. The train travels through two national parks, and tour operators plan to use it as a tourism booster.

Wellbeing goals
Africa is ‘Transforming Tourism’ and I’m happy to be part of it. I’m happy to see the development of the African Charter on Sustainable and Responsible Tourism – signed last year by 20 countries – and its goals for 2030, which are an obligation to reflect on the connections between tourism and sustainable development.

Good health and wellbeing is a factor that countries in Africa must look at. Defining the health of both locals and tourists is important, and we must not create a gap between the two. Tourism plays a critical role in achieving water access and security, as well as hygiene and sanitation for all, but hotel development needs to be regulated to ensure that hotels and resorts do not siphon off – quite literally – much-needed water from local communities.

SWAA’s role
The Spa and Wellness Association of Africa is a non-profit organisation that aims to develop and maintain internationally recognised standards and to improve the knowledge and technical skills of all spa and wellness professionals. SWAA is now becoming a coalition for African countries, and works to promote Africa as a wellness destination. We consult various government departments as well as national associations in the African spa and wellness industry. We support tourism boards to see how we can help them set up budgets for wellness tourism.

Some African countries – including Tanzania, Kenya, Nigeria, Ghana, Tunisia and Mauritius – have targets for 2030 that include medical and wellness tourism budgets. We can see that the interest is there, and industry figures like those laid

Education and standards

We’re planning to develop standards for African indigenous treatments, as we start to collect data on local treatments and African medicinal plants, with the support of the GWI Africa Wellness Initiative. Our networking events, held in different countries each year, provide a place where members can come and train, and we soon plan to have education providers available on our online platform so people in Africa can access the online training for just US$5-$10. We’ve made it mobile-friendly, so we can reach rural areas, where people might not have access to computers, but will have cell phones. We hope to launch this programme by mid-2018.

SWAA Unbuntu Education is an initiative within SWAA that helps to certify therapists and supports spa managers or directors through educational programmes. It also supports spas, wellness centres, beauty academies and schools in Africa with accreditation. Additionally, it provides a platform for less fortunate people in Africa who want to join our industry, giving them a start either through a SWAA-accredited school or spa.

Africa rising

Africa is waking up to wellness, and the diaspora has created a demand not only on the continent, but also internationally. Companies today need to cater to African skin types and demands, but that awareness is growing; just seven years ago, skincare companies weren’t... too keen on adding a woman of colour to their ads, but today, product houses and media have woken up to ‘Africa Rising’. We have several made-in-Africa skincare lines, such as Terres D’Afrique, and the numbers keep growing.

Spas in Africa need to raise their standards to be able to cater to the demand from well-travelled wellness tourists seeking international and indigenous treatments. We can’t continue to get by with sub-par standards and expect to compete globally. Africa needs more skilled people, collaborations from governments and businesses to further develop these skills if we want to grow, and we also need to change the way we promote Africa as a whole.

The continent offers vast natural resources – from dramatic coastal landscapes to wild safari parks to untapped hot springs – and there’s incredible opportunity to build from that and use Africa’s rich ancestral knowledge to create authentic spa and wellness destinations and experiences.

Global Wellness Institute Initiatives:
tackling key issues for the spa industry

In the past year, the Global Wellness Institute has doubled the number of industry initiatives it oversees. We take a look at some of their accomplishments.

One pillar of the non-profit Global Wellness Institute (GWI) is to support a fast-growing number of global industry initiatives, whose shared mission is to drive new global conversations about the most crucial wellness industry markets and solve the most pressing wellness industry issues. And the past year has been a major growth story, with the GWI doubling the number of initiatives it oversees as an “umbrella” organisation.

Wellness is a vast and deeply global US$3.7tn industry, but the individual 10-sector markets that it comprises – whether spa or workplace wellness or hot springs – can be fragmented. The “initiative” model allows experts to formulate a topic or mission, create a task force of industry leaders on that particular market or topic, and then empowers people to run with it. The model has proved a great success; the GWI could never accomplish on its own what these 20 expert-led initiatives have done.

The initiatives take on a life of their own, meeting regularly to move their projects forward, whether it’s new research or a philanthropic campaign. Every initiative chair and task force member selflessly donates their time and expertise for the greater good of their industry, and generally helps drive more health and wellness in the world. And that’s not always easy for international teams, where a strategy call can take place at 8:00am for one member and midnight for another.

Although all 20 of the GWI Initiatives are relevant to the spa industry, the following is a report on nine initiatives that have special connections to spas, from the Global Mentorship Programme to the WORLD Retreat Initiative to Wellness for Cancer. Some have just launched, while some have been running strong for years.

In the following pages, each initiative chair describes what their initiative is about, what they’ve accomplished this year, and what’s on the table for the next.
This initiative was forged in 2017 in response to a new reality: we live in an age where beauty and health are converging in a meaningful way. In previous decades, beauty was tied to superficiality or perceived as “only skin deep”, but that concept is now being replaced by the realisation that we can only be our most beautiful selves when we are in our most healthy state – physically, mentally, socially and spiritually. This leads to an exciting moment for the beauty industry, which must now push the value of beauty and health as partners in the development of being our best.

The Beauty Meets Wellness Initiative is focusing on two key deliverables: new research and trends forecasting. These two campaigns will help ensure that the beauty and wellness findings intersect and that the message is clear and direct.

The research planned will cover diverse topics. Can you have wellness without beauty? What is the impact of beauty on individual self-esteem and social connection? Are there gender differences in conceptualising beauty? How do specific cultures or belief systems impact the concept of beauty? What is the fallout from an addiction to beauty, the “pathology of perfection”?

The planned forecasting reports will identify trends for each of the topics above and, more generally, explore how the beauty industry reconnects with the times.
A strong focus of the Career Development Initiative – one of the GWI’s very first – has been the Global Mentorship Programme (GMP), which is now in its third year.

The GMP was formed to address the lack of well-trained spa staff globally. It matches seasoned executives with at least five years’ experience with up-and-coming professionals in a mentor-mentee relationship. The mentees must have at least two years’ experience as general managers, spa directors, spa managers, assistant spa managers, lead receptionists or lead therapists. Mentors share their expertise with their mentees and, ideally, the mentorship lasts between three and six months, with one 60-minute call every two weeks. Mentees and mentors are bound by a code of conduct and registered at the Online Mentorship Platform.

In the past year, 32 global ambassadors have been named – with approximately 18 more soon to be announced. The next objective is to create a living, breathing network of spa, wellness and hospitality associations worldwide, which encourages its members to use the GMP as a free benefit. We’re also creating a resource at mentorship evidence.com, where spa management programmes will donate free online courses to the mentors and mentees. We’re working on a survey for all mentors and mentees, designed to find out what leadership in action means to them.

The Mentorship Programme was formed to address the lack of well-trained spa staff globally.

The Eastern European Initiative was formed about a year ago, and in that time the framework of the working group has been defined. We aim to gather with official ministry representatives, entrepreneurs and practitioners to share wellness best practices from across Eastern Europe. Those practices are rooted in ancient wisdom, yet transformed into modern services to promote a wellness culture that has both local and global appeal.

The initiative team, now comprising five experts from the region – from Poland, Romania, Greece, Latvia and Estonia – ran a consumer survey in 2016 to explore the general awareness of wellness in the Eastern European region and to evaluate the limitations and opportunities of actively participating in wellness activities.

Our group is now working on expanding the team in order to produce a research handbook that will collect the traditional and contemporary wellness cultures from the region, with a publication goal of Q4 2017. Also on deck in the next year will be a series of roundtables, with resulting white papers and videos made available on the GWI’s Eastern European Initiative web page. The first, very successful, roundtable was held in April 2017 in Riga, Latvia, where the gathered group of experts tackled best practices for wellness in the Baltics.
In the past year, we’ve focused on increasing awareness of the global hot springs community. There is ever-growing consumer interest in this segment of the burgeoning global wellness economy. To support this effort, our presentation at the Global Wellness Summit centred around the (r)evolution of the hot springs experience, from its ancient cultural beginnings to its current resurgent status. Our panel presented the health benefits and business impact, and discussed how the global community is looking to the future of hot springs.

In the next year, our mission is to aggregate existing research and to support new studies on the health benefits of bathing in geothermal and hot spring mineral waters. We’ll also enhance and promote the welnessevidence.com resource, which is a portal designed to help people explore medical evidence for the most common wellness therapies. Concurrently, we’ll also be creating a comprehensive and sustainable best practices profile for water sanitation and recirculation. An additional future plan for the initiative is to develop a map of natural mineral hot springs destinations across the world.
It’s increasingly clear that we’re all part of one interconnected world, and that we must tap into innovation, knowledge and experience across all sectors of society to address the challenges of bringing more wellness to more people. The wellness industry is deeply involved in community-focused healthy living efforts throughout the world. The recently formed Social Impact Initiative will identify and share the evidence-based, ethical practices and projects that companies and communities are collaborating on to benefit society. Our first step is to build the initiative team, and we’re recruiting a diverse group of experts to volunteer.

"We’ll identify and share evidence-based, ethical practices that benefit society."

Social Impact Initiative

Wellness communications leader
Wellness Architecture Initiative

Veronica Schreibeis Smith, chair
CEO & founding principal, Vera Iconica Design

The Wellness Architecture Initiative was founded in 2016 and the committee is made up of experts from five countries. With wellness architecture identified as a top trend, we’ve had an exciting year. This spring, the initiative launched a survey to gather a collection of sample wellness architecture projects from around the globe. These projects will then be mapped and promoted to spread awareness that design centred around human health and wellbeing is not a future ideal; it is the focus for leaders today.

In the summer of 2017, the initiative hosted a roundtable that facilitated discussions from thinkers across industries whose expertise relates to the built environment. Discussion included the definition of wellness architecture, how to overcome the dilemma around measuring qualitative aspects of human wellbeing, and tackling other key industry hurdles. Findings will be shared at the Global Wellness Summit in October.

Wellness for Cancer

Julie Bach, chair
Executive director, Wellness for Cancer

In 2016, the Wellness for Cancer Initiative (WFC) extended awareness and built new bridges with local doctors and cancer organisations in Italy, the UK, India, France and Mexico. And it was in 2016 that we launched the first outreach project to bring peace and calm to end-of-life individuals living in the ghettos of India, which was set to be replicated in September 2017.

WFC will publish desperately needed evidence-based guidelines. Many cancer patients and survivors utilise spa, wellness and integrative therapies during and beyond cancer treatment to manage symptoms and improve quality of life. Practical and authoritative guidelines are imperative to inform our industry on the use of safe, effective and evidence-based therapies.

WFC has assembled a strong panel, representing wellness industry experts from eight countries – and experts from another 29 countries through the extended network of our medical collaboration. These multidisciplinary experts were assembled at a roundtable hosted this year to develop guidelines for mind-body solutions.

“Practical and authoritative guidelines are imperative to inform our industry”
In 2017, the World Health Organization reported that depression is the largest cause of disability worldwide. The World Bank said that “the foregone economic output because of mental, neurological and substance use disorders globally is in trillions of dollars.”

Simultaneously, the wellness community has been exploring paths to mental wellbeing, inner fulfillment, and development of qualities such as compassion, wisdom, joy, generosity, and enlightened leadership. These offer wider choices than the treatment of a conventional mental health framework. They offer ways to move beyond perceived limits towards a realm of human potential that is grounded in continuing growth – both neurological and experiential. A growing body of evidence lends support to their validity.

A group of sixteen experienced wellness practitioners has shaped the Mental Wellness Initiative’s broad-spectrum approach to wellness: from the molecular (microbiome and telomeres) to self-care through yoga, meditation, exercise and diet, to the wider influences of society and the natural environment in creating conditions for expanding human potential and fulfillment. A newly formed initiative, our mission in the next year is to identify paths to mental wellness and higher human potential, to develop guidelines and curricula, and generate a broad-spectrum body of searchable evidence.

“Our mission for the next year is to identify paths to mental wellness and higher human potential.”
WORLD Retreat Initiative

Professor Marc Cohen, MBBS (Hons), PhD, B MEd Sc (Hons), chair
Professor of Health Sciences, RMIT University, and chair, Australasian Wellness Association

The WORLD (Wellness Outcomes from Residential Lifestyle Destination) Retreat Initiative’s goal is to assess the health impact of immersive wellness retreat experiences. This builds on previous research done by my group at RMIT University at the Gwinganna Lifestyle Retreat, which indicated significant psychological, physical and cognitive benefits, along with reduced health symptoms, after a week-long retreat stay. In the next year, we plan to publish a systematic review of the literature to date on health retreat experiences and build a resource website, retreatscience.org.

We’ll also undertake a Global Retreat Survey (at retreatsurvey.org) that will be translated into multiple languages and will explore the characteristics, demographics and motivations of people who visit wellness retreats around the world. We will begin collecting data from retreat guests before and after their stay, with follow-ups at six, 12 and 24 weeks, in order to assess a range of physical, psychological, cognitive and clinical measures.

We’ve already enlisted the support of a number of retreat centres, including the Golden Door in Australia, Danubius Hotel Group properties in Eastern Europe, the Body Holiday in St Lucia, Lapinha Spa in Brazil, Sheenjoy in China, and Atmantan in India. And we’re hoping to enlist others, so we can make an impact on retreat science and help bridge the gap between the travel, tourism and healthcare sectors.

“We’re hoping to make an impact on retreat science, and bridge the gap between the travel, tourism and healthcare sectors.”
Wellness communities are on the rise as developers, investors, consumers and governments start to see the benefits of living spaces dedicated to health. Jane Kitchen takes a closer look at the growing market.

The Global Wellness Institute (GWI) has estimated wellness real estate to be a US$118.6bn (€107bn, £95bn) sector that’s growing at a rate of nearly 20 per cent, with communities cropping up worldwide. This has spurred a GWI Initiative on wellness communities, as well as the first dedicated research report on the subject, to be released at the 2017 Global Wellness Summit.

The GWI Initiative developed a white paper that has helped to define the category. In order to deem a community “well”, it must feature some kind of environmental consciousness, with sustainable development and operating practices; have a commitment to holistic health and wellness; and foster social connections. Spas can feature front-and-centre in these developments, and many include substantial wellness centres on-site.

“With the development of this market, spas and the spa lifestyle have the opportunity to serve at the heart of the community,” says Mia Kyricos, chair of the GWI Initiative on wellness communities and founder of strategic advisory firm Kyricos & Associates.

Finding connections, whether it’s through community activities, spending time in nature or intergenerational living, is something wellness communities aim to nourish – and that is appealing to developers. Kyricos says she expects the sector to grow. “This isn’t just an underserved market for a select few; it’s a major market opportunity that spans all income levels and geographies,” she says.

In the following pages, we highlight some of the biggest communities across the world.
Serenbe broke ground on its first house in 2004, and today the community is home to more than 400 residents. Each of Serenbe’s four hamlets have different commercial centres focused on the elements of a well life: arts for inspiration, agriculture for nourishment, health for wellbeing, and education for awareness.

The community features a strong connection to nature, with miles of trails connecting homes, an edible landscape and acres of preserved forests and meadows – all with homes specifically designed for community living.

Plans are underway for a major destination spa of around 30,000sq ft (2,787sq m) alongside a boutique hotel. Serenbe founder Steve Nygren says he’s creating a “village of wellness.”
OLIVETTE

Near Asheville, North Carolina

Opening: through 2027

Between 300 and 350 homes are being built along the French Broad River near Asheville, North Carolina, over the next ten years, in a wellness community described as an “agrihood in the making.” Olivette Farm – an on-site organic farm – preceded the development, and is designed to affirm the community’s commitment to re-localising food production. At peak production, the farm will feed 175 families. The community also features edible gardens and landscaping, berry and fruit orchards, and honey bees, as part of its ‘plough-to-pantry’ philosophy.

A large portion of the land at Olivette is preserved for hiking trails and green space, with more than 10 miles of interior hiking trails and an eight-acre community park on the French Broad River. “Blue Mind” points are also being developed throughout the community, to create places where people can connect with the water.

GOCO RETREAT TEMESCAL VALLEY

California

Opening: 2019

GOCO Hospitality is developing a wellness community next to Glen Ivy Hot Springs, which it acquired last year. GOCO Retreat Temescal Valley will include residences and townhomes, a wellness hotel and a boutique lifestyle hotel.

A full-service wellness centre will be on-site with 30 to 40 treatment rooms, thermal experiences and hot springs bathing. Additionally, there will be a medi-spa, fitness centre, yoga and mind/body studios, meeting rooms, a wedding chapel, community village, farmer’s market, kids’ club, organic farm and experience learning centre, and a hospitality academy and training centre.

Wellness programmes and journeys will be offered, with a full-service retreat with doctors and specialist consultants at arrival, a variety of treatments, fitness activities and learning workshops. A wellness restaurant, tea lounge and juice bar will offer farm-to-table cuisine and personalised food menus.
Located on Bainbridge Island, a 35-minute ferry ride from downtown Seattle, Grow Community is being developed with a sustainability action plan and a goal of community connection, smaller carbon footprints and increased health and wellbeing.

A total of 142 homes are being built in three phases; phase one is complete, and work is underway on phase two. The emphasis is on creating a compact, neighbourly community with shared green spaces, and essential services and facilities located within a short walk or cycle ride of all the homes.

When it’s fully developed, Grow will provide more than 50 per cent open space, including myriad garden options for enriched community connection.

The first phase of Grow was completed in 2014, and residents have been living there since 2012. In the first three years, residents reported an 85 per cent increase in walking and a 30 per cent increase in cycling, and 65 per cent of residents participated in communal gardening. Three-quarters of households reported improved physical or mental wellbeing compared to where they lived before.
PRAIRIE CROSSING

Grayslake, Illinois

Opened: 1992

First opened in 1992, Prairie Crossing was designed to combine the preservation of open land, easy commuting by rail and responsible development practices, and includes a 100-acre working organic farm.

Ten principles established by the community’s founders have guided Prairie Crossing since its inception: environmental protection and enhancement, a healthy lifestyle, a sense of place, a sense of community, economic and racial diversity, convenient and efficient transportation, energy conservation, lifelong learning and education, aesthetic design and high-quality construction and economic viability.

The community’s landscape was designed with native plants that purify stormwater and enhance the habitat for wildlife, 10-mile trails for exercising, and a 20-acre lake for swimming, boating and fishing. An edible landscape includes a wide variety of fruit and nuts to harvest.

DESTINATION MEDICAL CENTER

Rochester, Minnesota

Project: started in 2014, continuing for 20 years

Destination Medical Center is a US$5.6bn, 20-year economic development initiative that aims to make the entire city of Rochester, Minnesota, a global destination for health and wellness.

The project will see the expansion of the world-renowned medical centre, the Mayo Clinic, and will also provide healthy community features for both local residents and the clinic’s patients and visitors. Public investment of US$585m will help develop housing in downtown Rochester, near Mayo Clinic, as well as health and wellness activities.

The Discovery Square area borrows from Mayo Clinic’s integrated care model to create an integrated district founded in the principles of translational medicine, and aims to position Rochester as the “Silicon Valley of Medicine,” bringing doctors and researchers together and driving job growth.
Lake Nona, near Orlando, Florida, is a collaborative effort between Florida Hospital and University of Central Florida, and is home to the Lake Nona Institute, a non-profit, community-focused organisation with an aim to inspire healthy, sustainable communities of the future. More than 50,000 people lived there as of 2015, and estimates have the population at 75,000 to 100,000 by 2020.

The 17-square-mile planned residential community near Orlando is a “living laboratory,” designed to feature clusters of innovation and centres of excellence in health and wellbeing, sports, human performance and education. The design incorporates trails, bike sharing, green space, community programmes and group activities.

Lake Nona is also home to the Johnson & Johnson Human Performance Institute – where executives and athletes learn how to improve their health, energy levels and mental sharpness – and the Sanford-Burnham institute, which conducts research on obesity, diabetes, and cardiovascular disease.

Lake Nona anticipates adding a medically integrated fitness centre and a hotel with a spa and wellbeing centre. Spa consultancy WTS International has worked on the analysis and planning for the proposed Lake Nona Spa, which will include a “concept without borders.”
GOCO Hospitality is creating a GOCO Retreat across 750 acres (304 hectares) in the West Virginia countryside, not far from Washington, DC. The project focuses heavily on the area’s natural mineral springs, and will include both a 70-bedroom wellness hotel and 150 houses. Ingo Schweder, GOCO Hospitality CEO, said he expects the homes to attract busy city dwellers in Washington, DC, or Charlotte, North Carolina, who are looking for a second-home escape.

An on-site 4,000sq m (43,056sq ft) spa will include mineral spring bathing and other wellness activities, including canoeing, hiking, biking and horseback riding, will be incorporated in the Retreat.

Schweder said he is also in talks with a DC-based sustainable think tank to be anchored to the Retreat, and that he expects the location to be a space for politicians to escape for off-site meetings. The Retreat is in the masterplanning stage; an opening date has not been set.

Located in the historic coastal fishing and farming town of Todos Santos, Tres Santos is described as “an intimate mindful living village”. The development includes a 3.5-mile bike and pedestrian path connecting the village to the beach, as well as a 1.5-acre organic town garden with winding paths, an orchard and farm-to-table restaurant.

Tres Santos includes outdoor wellness activities such as surfing, yoga, biking, walking, swimming and trekking. While it doesn’t yet have plans for an on-site spa, Elizabeth Shapiro, a spokesperson for the development, says they are in talks with several spa operators and “that’s definitely something we’re interested in doing.”
New York City-based architecture practice Tsao & McKown recently designed Sangha, a 19-hectare (47-acre) luxury wellness retreat along Yangcheng Lake, located just outside Suzhou, China. The health-focused lifestyle resort includes a 69-bedroom wellness hotel, a 6,000sq m (64,583sq ft) spa, a learning campus, as well as a collection of four-bedroom residential villas and apartments.

REGEN VILLAGE

Almere, the Netherlands
Opening: 2018

ReGen Villages is a tech-integrated real-estate development company that’s creating a new kind of wellness community – a regenerative model for eco-communities with self-sustaining energy and food. The first pilot community is being developed in Almere, the Netherlands, with 300 homes, and other developments are also being considered across Europe, in Sweden, Denmark, Norway, Germany and Belgium.

The idea for the communities is to address the challenges of a growing population, increasing urbanisation, scarcity of resources and the growing global food crisis – as well as reducing the global CO₂ emission and reducing burdens on municipal and national governments. ReGen aims to create a sense of community, reconnect people with nature and consumption with production, and restore biodiversity to the surrounding landscapes. “We like to think of ReGen as the Tesla of ecovillages,” says founder James Ehrlich. “We want to make it easy, convenient and accessible to choose a sustainable lifestyle off the grid.”

A community centre will include a piazza kitchen and space for yoga, meditation and other kinds of wellness curricula, and there could be opportunities for spas to be part of the planned community.
The Welsh government is funding a master plan for a wellness village in South Wales. The Llanelli Wellness and Life Science Village is just one of a number of projects being delivered through ARCH (A Regional Collaboration for Health), a partnership between three local university health boards. Llanelli Wellness Village will include an education centre to deliver training and skills development in the wellbeing arena; a wellness hotel; a sports and wellbeing centre; and an Institute of Life Science (ILS) focusing on near market-ready research and innovation and business facilities. There will also be communities focused on healthy living, rehabilitation and respite, including suitable living environments for people with disabilities to live with their families. Evolve marketplace

Data from the latest Global Wellness Economy Monitor shows healthy growth in the industry. Ophelia Yeung highlights the study’s key findings.

Figures from the 2016 Global Wellness Economy Monitor show that the global spa and thermal/mineral springs industries continue to grow, evolving with consumer preferences in a dynamic wellness economy. The current and future state of the wellness economy is strong, propelled by consumer and demographic trends that are fuelling increased spending on both health and wellbeing.

The Global Wellness Institute (GWI) estimates 121,595 spas were operating worldwide in 2015, earning US$77.6bn (€70.1bn, £50.8bn) in revenue and employing more than 2.1 million people. When measured in US dollars, industry revenue expanded 2.3 per cent annually since 2013, adding US$3.5bn during the period from 2013 to 2015. However, when the figure is reported in euros, revenue growth was an impressive 11.9 per cent annually from 2013 to 2015, growing from €56bn to €70.1bn. The difference is due to the appreciation of the US dollar against the euro during this time. To grasp the scale of the industry’s growth, it might be more illuminating to consider the 16,005 new spas worldwide and the 237,424 new employees who have joined the industry since 2013.

The largest growth in the number of spas and revenues occurred in the hotel/resort spas category. This is because most 4-star properties and many 3-star properties have been adding spa services as they have quickly become an amenity expected by guests, even at the mid-tier level. In many of the mature spa markets, the growth in the number of spas reflects the addition of spas to existing hotel/resort properties as much as, or more than, openings of entirely new properties. This trend is also decreasing the average size of a spa, as those targeting the mid-tier market tend to be smaller than the flagship spas in higher-end properties.

While Europe continues to lead in overall spa revenues, Asia-Pacific... boasts the greatest number of spa establishments and also added the most new spas between 2013 and 2015.

MARKET GROWTH
Not surprisingly, China led the charge, while other emerging markets such as India, Indonesia, Vietnam and Thailand continued to expand. In the mature markets in North America and Europe, spas have continued to grow in number and revenues. Meanwhile, Africa, the Middle East and Latin America also showed robust growth, fuelled by a rising middle class with more disposable income. However, security concerns have put a dampener on growth in some Middle Eastern and North African countries.

The solid growth rates must not mask the challenges faced by spas today. Even with an expanding customer base, spas are facing rising operating costs, skilled labour shortages and competition from new spas and non-spa entities. At the same time, spas are navigating a complex landscape where consumers demand value, quality, specialisation, one-stop convenience, authenticity, differentiation, evidence and results.

We project spa facility revenues will rise at a 6 per cent annual rate over the next few years, reaching an estimated US$104bn (€99.4bn, £84.7bn) by 2020. The industry is likely to employ 2.8 million workers by then and will need an extra 400,000 trained spa therapists and 70,000 experienced spa managers and directors to accommodate this growth.

Spa growth also drives a broader spa economy, encompassing not just spas, but also other sectors that support and enable spa businesses, such as spa education, consulting, capital investment, associations, media and events. These related sectors added US$21bn (€20bn, £17bn) to 2015’s US$77.6bn spa revenues to create a US$98.6bn (€94.2bn, £80.3bn) global spa economy.

We project spa facility revenues will rise at a 6 per cent annual rate over the next few years, reaching an estimated US$104bn (€99.4bn, £84.7bn) by 2020. The industry is likely to employ 2.8 million workers by then.
Research study 2
THERMAL/MINERAL SPRINGS

In 2015, we estimate there were 27,507 establishments built around thermal/mineral springs for wellness, recreational and therapeutic purposes. These facilities are located in 109 countries and earned US$51bn (€46.1bn, £33.4bn) in revenues in 2015. Our research indicates that there is rapidly rising consumer, investor and government interest in springs-based activities, with most establishments experiencing solid growth in both attendance and revenues.

Measured in US dollars, the industry added US$1bn in revenues from 2013 to 2015, growing from US$50bn in 2013 to US$51bn in 2015. However, this modest growth trend is deceptive because it is dampened by the recent currency fluctuations. The areas with the largest thermal/mineral springs industries – especially Europe and Japan – saw major currency depreciation against the US dollar from 2013 to 2015, and so the revenue growth rates in these countries were much higher in their local currencies than in US dollars. Converting industry revenues to euros, the thermal/mineral springs industry grew by a robust 10.4 per cent annually between 2013 and 2015 – from €37.9bn in 2013 to €46.1bn in 2015.

Most of the world’s thermal/mineral springs industry is concentrated in Asia-Pacific and Europe (94 per cent of establishments and 96 per cent of industry revenues). Japan alone, with its estimated 17,328 onsen, is home to nearly two-thirds of all establishments. But, because of their typically small size, they earn less revenues than China’s hot springs resorts (numbering 2,200). Other top markets include European countries with long traditions of using thermal/mineral waters for therapeutic purposes. The decline in government subsidies for bathing as cure is driving many businesses to invest in better facilities to attract a younger, self-paying clientele.

The world’s thermal/mineral springs establishments include a mix of rustic, traditional bathing facilities, hot springs resorts, hotels with thermal water bathing, thermal waterparks and thermal/mineral water-based sanatoria or health resorts. Establishments that offer value-added spa services – such as massage or facials – earn much higher revenues than those that offer bathing only. Thermal/mineral springs that offer such services (about a quarter of them) tend to be more developed and higher-end, and they account for nearly two-thirds of the industry’s revenues.

Overall, the thermal/mineral springs industry is positioned for rising investment and growth, as consumers increasingly seek out the healing and relaxing properties of water and nature. We project that industry revenues will grow at 4.8 per cent annually from 2015 to 2020, driven by rising consumer interest. Many countries are also including thermal/mineral springs as a major pillar in their wellness tourism marketing and development strategies, such as Greece, Turkey, China, Japan, Chile and Uruguay, among others.

THE WELLNESS ECONOMY

The wellness economy encompasses industries that enable consumers to incorporate wellness activities into their daily lives. In addition to data on spas and thermal/mineral springs, the GWI provides original data for the size of the global wellness tourism industry, workplace wellness and wellness real estate. These five industries – combined with five other wellness sectors that we measure using secondary sources – comprise the global wellness economy, a US$3.7tn (€3.5tn, £3tn) market in 2015. The wellness economy now represents more than 5 per cent of global economic output, and it is almost half the size of global health expenditures, which reached US$7.6tn (€7.3tn, £6.2tn) in 2014. From 2013 to 2015, the wellness economy grew by 10.6 per cent (from US$3.4tn to US$3.7tn), while in the same period, the global economy shrank by -3.6 per cent.

Wellness economy growth is robust and resilient because it is positioned at the intersection of several major global trends: rising disposable incomes; the emerging global middle class; the mounting global health crisis; an increasing interest in travel, authenticity and new experiences; and an emerging collective consciousness about the wellbeing of people and the planet.

Opportunities are particularly strong for businesses and sectors that aim to help people integrate wellness into their daily lives instead of thinking of it as a luxury activity. As more people around the world turn to wellness-focused activities and lifestyles to mitigate their mounting stress and deteriorating health, we project that spas, thermal/mineral springs and other wellness sectors will continue expanding at a healthy pace – faster than global GDP growth – in the coming years.

Retail therapy

Spa retail is critical not only to profitability, but also to a spa’s overall brand message and vision. Nancy Griffin highlights some of the findings from Contento Marketing’s in-depth retail survey.

Retail sales are an important component of any spa’s profitability, but many spa directors struggle to create a meaningful retail concept and engage their therapists with selling.

A new survey, conducted by Contento Marketing, found that only about half of spas are satisfied with their retail concept, and more than half acknowledge that their retail area could benefit from improvement. While this may sound discouraging, it’s an incredible opportunity for skincare brands and consultants to help create more engaging, dynamic retail concepts – and to help shape the future of spa retail.

The survey was administered in March 2017 to 400 US-based spa directors, owners and operators. Contento collaborated on the survey design with Ann Patton, principal of Savvy Spas and instructor of the spa retail course at the University of California Irvine Spa & Hospitality Management programme. The goal was to design an in-depth survey on spa retail trends, challenges and opportunities, financial metrics, compensation, sales and merchandising strategies and vendor relations.

Of the 150 survey respondents, 85 per cent were spa directors or managers, and 15 per cent fell in the “other” category, which included owner/presidents and regional, national or corporate directors. Participating properties included Destination Hotels, ESPA, Fairmont, Four Seasons, Hilton, Hyatt, Langham Hotels, Mandarin Oriental, Marriott, Montage, Omni, Ritz Carlton and Rosewood Hotels, Sheraton, St. Regis and Westin.

Nearly half (48 per cent) of respondents were resort spas, with hotel spas representing 19 per cent and day spas representing 18 per cent. While the participating properties were US-based, the insights presented are useful for any owner, operator, manager, supplier or consultant seeking baseline metrics and strategies to improve spa retail sales.

Satisfaction with retail operations

Slightly more than half (52 per cent) of spas surveyed responded that they had a strong retail concept and presentation, but only a quarter of the respondents were satisfied with the visual appeal. Overall sales volumes and inventory turn rates showed a similar trend: only one-fifth of respondents were completely
Sixty-five per cent of respondents report an increase in revenues in facial skincare satisfied, and 55 per cent conceded that they could be improved. Regarding retail profitability, the results showed that 37 per cent of those surveyed were highly satisfied with their margins, while half said retail profits could be improved.

Retail trends by category
Sixty-five per cent of respondents reported an increase in revenues year-over-year in professional skincare for the face, with sales flat for only 8 per cent. Sales for body products were mixed: up for 44 per cent, flat for 40 per cent, and down for 13 per cent. Just over one-third of respondents said they did not offer wellness gifts, books and music, and one-fifth did not offer accessories or apparel – perhaps an area for potential new sales.

Challenges
Staff resistance to selling is the number one retail-sales blocker, with three-quarters of respondents citing it as the biggest spa retail challenge. It’s also increasingly becoming a challenge to retain employees, as many therapists consider themselves healers rather than sellers, and are looking at models that don’t require sales as part of the job.

“One of the reasons massage therapists are attracted to on-demand employers is because they aren’t expected to sell,” says Michael Tompkins, executive recruiter at Hutchinson Consulting.

Over half (55 per cent) of respondents felt pressure from online sites like Amazon and eBay – which often offer quick home delivery and attractive pricing – yet only a quarter of respondents said that other spas in the immediate areas carrying the same lines created a significant challenge.

Table 1: Retail trends by category, January 2015 - January 2016
NEXf STEPS

1. Make retail a priority. Spas with successful retail sales work hard. Make a plan to review your visual merchandising, product mix and compensation strategy. Re-merchandise regularly. Work closely with your vendors to create shelf-talkers, counter-top displays, special promotions and guest-appreciation events.

2. Measure retail per service. Professional products used in treatments are the current driver of retail for the majority of spas. Savvy spa operators are measuring the amount of retail sold per service, in addition to monitoring their retail sales as a percentage of overall spa revenues. Estheticians and massage therapists have the client’s ear – it makes sense for them to initiate the sale.

3. Train and incentivise all frontline staff. Hire front-desk staff with sales acumen – then pave the way for their success by providing the right tools. Training front-desk and retail staff on selling techniques and skincare lines in conjunction with licensed staff will become a necessity. “Structuring sales incentives for all personnel will be key to a successful operation,” says Michael Tompkins, executive recruiter at Hutchinson Consulting.

4. Develop multiple retail touchpoints. Resort properties will benefit from telling a continuous product story not only through the spa, but also through the entire property. Think complimentary in-room gift sets, spa products as gifts and pop-up spa events in the lobby, poolside or meeting space.

5. Don’t lose the sale. Selling spa products on your website increases your spa’s profitability by providing a convenient method of re-purchase. If e-commerce is not practical, ask your vendors to drop-ship. “Working with resource partners to create drop-ship opportunities and custom gift sales will be a win-win for spa and vendor,” says Tompkins.

6. Look to day spas for inspiration. Key indicators show that day spas outperform resort and hotel spas in retail sales, generating a higher retail-to-service ratio and higher average retail sales per square foot. Resort and hotel operators can learn from them how to grow retail sales and the facial services that drive retail sales.

7. Hire a designated retail associate. “Consider a role for a personal skincare shopper in the spa, who designs product-specific, results-oriented skincare regimes tailored to each guest’s needs. ‘Personal skincare stylist’ could be a retail job role of the future,” says Tompkins.

Next steps: Ninety-eight per cent of respondents offer a commission structure to therapists and/or front desk staff.

> “Spas are typically in direct competition for a certain market segment,” says Savvy Spas’ Patton. “It’s essential that spa directors and retail managers, at a minimum, keep abreast of the retail offerings of their direct comp set.”

Sales channels: Spa directors report losing sales to websites like Amazon and eBay, yet 70 per cent still don’t offer the ability to purchase online from the spa. Day spas are leading the pack when it comes to e-commerce sales; more than three times more day spas than hotel and resort spas offer e-commerce – 56 per cent of day spas versus 11 per cent of hotel spas and 14 per cent of resort spas. Less than a third of spas work with their vendors to drop-ship, but Patton sees that changing, which will help spas become more competitive with retail sales. “Vendor drop-shipping will become a must for spa retail sales in the future,” she explains. Only 10 per cent of respondents sold spa retail outside the four walls of the spa, representing a significant opportunity to increase revenues. Strategies are needed to sell retail outside of spa; kiosks, pop-up displays and portable rolling retail cases can generate interest in the spa while providing an additional revenue centre.

Re-merchandising
Re-merchandising refers to changing products and visual displays to optimise retail mix and sell-through. The majority of spas surveyed re-merchandised monthly (44 per cent), followed by weekly (31 per cent). But, many experts recommend re-merchandising more frequently – even every day. Small, daily changes can have a big impact and keep things looking fresh and new.

Compensation strategies
Almost every respondent (98 per cent) offered some sort of commission structure to either therapists and/or front-desk staff, and 64 per cent offered both commission and incentives. In terms of the structure of commission payout, 70 per cent offered a flat percentage payout, 34 per cent offered some type of sliding scale percentage, and 16 per cent offered “pooled” or shared commissions.

Vendor support
Overall, respondents appeared satisfied with vendor support. Raising vendor service levels will increase sales and strengthen brand and vendor relationships, but expectations must be realistic on both sides. The key areas for improved vendor support are in the areas of in-spa visual merchandising, partnering on consumer-facing events and vendor-sponsored staff rewards.

KEY PERFORMANCE INDICATORS

Retail sales versus overall revenues
When respondents were asked to benchmark retail sales against total spa revenue, nearly one-third of all respondents reported that retail made up less than 10 per cent of total sales. The highest number of respondents (38 per cent) reported a range of 11 to 15 per cent retail to total sales, and only 2 per cent reported retail-to-service sales of more than 30 per cent.

Retail per square foot
By obtaining retail revenues and the square footage allotted to retail space, Contento calculated average retail per square foot – the standard performance metrics for retail outlets. According to Patton, industry benchmarks suggest that a good goal for total annual retail sales per square foot is US$1,000 per square foot (€858, £769). Survey results indicate that day spas are proving to come very close to that overall benchmark at US$898 per square foot, while hotel and resort spas are averaging around US$750 per square foot.

Cosmetic services are a fast-growing subsection of the beauty and anti-ageing market, but few luxury hotels are reaping the benefits. Fabian Modena and Matthew Brennan outline the findings from a new study – and the opportunities for the industry.

The global wellness economy is growing at an unprecedented rate, and was valued at more than US$3.7tn in 2015. Making up the largest share of this is the beauty and anti-ageing market, which was valued at US$999bn – nearly twice the size of the wellness tourism market (US$563bn).

Within the beauty and anti-ageing market is the subsection of cosmetic beauty services. In today’s market, the word ‘cosmetic’ is used to serve the purpose of enhancing or augmenting external beauty, or for perceived physical improvement – and this subsection is growing quickly. Upscale and luxury hotels have an opportunity to capitalise on this, adding revenue with low-cost/high-margin treatments including longevity, aesthetic and detoxification treatments.

Invasive, non-invasive and minimally invasive
The cosmetic beauty services industry is commonly divided into three subsections: non-invasive, minimally invasive and invasive treatment or surgery. Minimally invasive procedures can be further subdivided into injectables and energy-based and cosmeceuticals.

Invasive treatments are surgical procedures that penetrate the skin by either cutting or piercing, such as liposuction, breast augmentation, eyelid surgery, tummy tucks or nose surgery. Non-invasive treatments do not require any penetration into the skin, and also cover a number of diagnostic and therapeutic procedures, including chiropractic manipulation, physical therapy and heat therapy.

Minimally invasive treatments are a combination of medical and beauty services, where the treatments may incorporate high-tech skincare and result in noticeable cosmetic changes or improvements. This includes injections such as Botox, dermal fillers, lipofilling and microdermabrasion, as well as lasers, chemical peels and cosmeceuticals – a combination of cosmetics and pharmaceuticals.

Medical aesthetic treatments
The international medical aesthetic treatment market is expected to rise to US$6.56bn by 2018, led by non-invasive treatments such as Botox, but also including a variation of energy-based services such as radio frequency and laser treatments, driving future medical aesthetic demand globally. The US represents the largest market in non-surgical cosmetic treatments, followed by Asia and Europe; however, the highest growth rates are being seen in Asia.

Minimally invasive treatments are gaining in popularity, as they require little to no downtime, often deliver immediate results and require very small incision or injection sites, resulting in less pain and very few post-procedure complications.

The facial aesthetic market specifically is expected to grow at a rate of 9.82 per cent until 2020, and a shift from invasive to non-invasive treatments is already evident. Between 2015 and 2016, the most significant growth rate was for photo-rejuvenation – a skin treatment that uses lasers to treat wrinkles or age spots – which grew 36 per cent and accounted for more than 650,000 procedures in the US. This was followed by hyaluronic acid treatments, which grew 16 per cent.

Key opportunities
We believe there are opportunities for upscale and luxury hotels to convert a cost centre into a revenue centre by implementing some medical and aesthetic services, depending on the hotel’s location and its access to relevant supplies.

Aesthetic and longevity treatments will cater towards both male and female consumers; however, our research has shown that aesthetic treatments are more popular with women and the longevity services are more popular with men – especially high-net-worth individuals. The longevity treatment service is a low-cost, high-margin opportunity – with margins above 2,200 per cent. Offering this type of specialised facility within a spa environment creates a niche for hotels to capitalise on this high-margin industry.

Detoxification treatments, such as chelation therapy, liver detox and lymphatic drainage, are intravenous therapies that are in high demand with consumers over the age of 36. The demand for energy boosters, such as Myers cocktails, megadose vitamins (MPV) and ozone IV therapy, as well as immune boosters like QRS treatment or mesenchymal stem cell, is booming for consumers aged over 65. Both treatment segmentations represent an attractive – and relatively straightforward – additional revenue centre for spa facilities.

There are still unexplored opportunities to implement a number of high-yielding cosmetic treatments within the hotel spa environment, incurring a reasonable investment volume and utilising less than 150sq m (1,615sq ft) of space.

Partnering with a third-party provider with a positive track record in aesthetic treatments is another path to introducing these services, and will guarantee expertise, trained specialists and long-standing supplier and industry relations. This can also help as many specialised treatments require associated licenses.

Most luxury hotel spas are not capitalising sufficiently on this ever-growing industry. An efficient implementation with a specifically tailored selection of services will not only elevate the spa facility’s reputation, but it will also open doors to a new customer segment with high disposable income.

Competition heats up

Christopher Lund and Pooja Hemrajani of Colliers International give a detailed overview of the growing spa market in Dubai

One of the growing trends in the travel and hospitality sector is the rise of the wellness industry. With greater focus on healthy habits and overall wellbeing, hotel spas are beginning to experience the positive impact of this trend. Within the UAE, Dubai’s spa market is in the lead, with more than 200 spas currently in operation, and more than 25 new hotel spas expected to open in the next year.

Given the growing significance of spas in the region and the interest from leading operators, Colliers International Hotels (MENA) launched the Dubai Spa Benchmark Report in 2015. The report features 14 key metrics designed to track spa operational performance.

DUBAI SPA MARKET PERFORMANCE

The 2016 market performance report is based on data received directly from a spa panel representing a stock of 321 treatment rooms.

Market performance in 2016

In 2015, the Dubai spa market experienced a 5 per cent decline in average treatment rates, due to increased pressure from new entrants and an increase in price-sensitive customers.

The rising popularity of spa and beauty apps offering promotions and discounts has also pushed up competition in the industry. However, 2016’s full-year figures reveal Dubai’s spa market has remained resilient. Average treatment rates grew by 5 per cent, from AED363 (US$99, €83, £75) in 2015 to AED382 (US$104, €87, £79) in 2016. Demand for treatments was steady – an average of 24 treatments per day in both 2015 and 2016. Overall, RevPATH (Revenue Per Available Treatment Hour) increased by 2 per cent in Dubai, indicating a small growth in spa revenues.

The largest share of demand in Dubai’s hotel spas is generated from the domestic market, representing 45-55 per cent of spa guests. Top source markets include GCC, UK and India, primarily those residing within the UAE. Demand for hotel spas has increased from UAE residents, with both city hotels and resorts reporting an increase in walk-in demand. International demand may represent anywhere between 20 and 40 per cent of guests, and is driven mainly by UK, German and Russian markets.

A closer analysis of the data reveals that the growth in spa revenue continues to be driven by Dubai’s resort market. Dubai’s resort spas have been able to recover from the dip in performance observed in 2015, returning to their 2014 performance levels.

Steady demand for resort spas

In 2016, resort spas in the sample demonstrated a slight growth in both rate and the number of treatments sold. Resort Demand for spa treatments has remained steady at an average of 24 treatments per day in both 2015 and 2016.
spas experienced a 3 per cent increase in average treatment rates from AED408 to AED420 (see Graph 2). The increase in average treatment rate is highest from Palm Jumeirah properties, a top-performing district within the Dubai hotel market in terms of hotel room average daily rate. Additionally, the average number of treatments sold per day in resort spas rose from 35 to 36 treatments per day. As a result, utilisation indicators have shown improvement, with an increase in both therapist and treatment room utilisation by 5 per cent and 9 per cent, respectively.

On the other hand, city hotels face challenges to maintain a steady customer base, as indicated by the drop in the number of treatments sold per day, from 14 to 12 treatments per day. However, city hotels experienced a growth in average treatment rate by 6 per cent, increasing from AED326 in 2015 to AED344 in 2016, resulting in a RevPATH growth of 2 per cent from AED43.6 to AED44.6.

While both resort spas and city hotel spas have seen an increase in the number of walk-in guests, resort spas have a higher share of in-house guests (61 per cent) than city hotel spas (57 per cent). As a result, resorts benefit from higher spending and bookings from tourists, while resident walk-in guests, often more price-sensitive, tend to look for discounts and seasonal promotions.

Retail revenue contribution showed a greater decline in city hotel spas than in resort spas (see Graph 1), falling from 11 per cent of total spa revenue in 2015 to 8 per cent in 2016. The data signals that hotels still cater to a higher share of price-sensitive demand, despite the rise in average treatment rates observed in 2016.

Increasing therapist productivity

Therapist utilisation is an important indicator to ensure that a spa is correctly staffed. It’s calculated by dividing the available therapist hours for the given period by the occupied therapist hours.

Data from 2016 reveals that the utilisation of therapist hours has increased in both city and resort spas (see Graph 3). Therapist utilisation in city hotel spas increased from 41 per cent to 43 per cent in 2016, despite a decrease in treatments sold, suggesting greater efficiencies in staffing. Resort spas experienced a greater increase in therapist utilisation, from 59 per cent to 63 per cent in 2016, along with a 5 per cent increase in treatment revenue generated per therapist, resulting from an increase in the number of treatments sold per day.
Both resort and city hotel spas in the sample have an average therapist to treatment room ratio of 0.9; however, therapist utilisation rates are higher in resort spas than in city spas. Less than 50 per cent of therapists’ hours are currently utilised in city hotel spas, which indicates an opportunity to create greater operational efficiencies.

New spa openings
The Dubai spa market is continuously growing, with new competition entering the market. Anticipated spa openings in 2017 include the luxury Bulgari Hotels and Resorts, operated by Marriott International, in Q4 2017, and Ola Spa at the newly opened Lapita Hotel Dubai Parks & Resorts, plus many more.

When analysing the data by facility age, new spas (open less than five years) have a 10 per cent premium in rate over established spas (open more than five years), and an average of 28 treatments sold per day, compared to 21 treatments per day in established spas. However, therapist utilisation rates were 50 per cent in new spas versus 53 per cent in established spas, suggesting greater efficiencies in established spas. New spas have a higher capture rate (2.9 per cent versus 1.9 per cent) of hotel guests, which may explain the premium in rate new spas are able to achieve.

New spas have a 10 per cent premium in rate over established spas and an average of 28 treatments sold per day, compared to 21 treatments per day in established spas.

Survey: Spa pre-openings
Given the large number of new spa openings in the Dubai hotel spa market,
Colliers International conducted a survey in March 2017 on spa pre-openings. Results from 19 respondents revealed that 68 per cent of spa openings in the sample were delayed by between one and six months, out of which 58 per cent of respondents said the spa opening was delayed between one and three months.

The timeline to open a spa, like a hotel, requires extensive planning and execution. Often the time required to effectively open a spa is misjudged, leading to delays. The primary reasons for spa opening delays reported in the survey were a result of the hotel opening being delayed; delays in the delivery of furniture, fitting and equipment (FF&E), or FF&E not being up to brand standards; and issues with obtaining the necessary licenses and permits.

Only 13 per cent of the sample reported recruitment as a reason for spa opening delays. Spa directors were typically recruited 4.2 months before the planned opening, while spa therapists were hired an average 1.8 months before opening. Spa managers and supervisors were onboarded 2.6 months and 2.3 months before opening, respectively.

Training and marketing

Additionally, 84 per cent of the respondent spas had a soft opening, typically for a period of between one week to a month, giving staff time to be trained and to get accustomed to the spa’s operations. It’s vital for staff to be trained, tested and re-trained prior to the opening date, with an ideal training period of at least two to three months prior to opening. For many openings, training takes place at the last moment, which can negatively impact the reputation and perception of the spa right from the start. Spa directors would benefit from scheduling regular training sessions after the spa has opened to cover items the staff may have forgotten or missed.

The survey revealed that 58 per cent of respondents began marketing the spa one month or less before opening, with only 11 per cent of respondents beginning marketing from four to six months out. Given the highly competitive environment, it’s vital to get a viable sales and marketing plan in place during the pre-opening period, focusing on both in-house guest demand and domestic demand. Gift certificates, brochures, treatment menus and special spa packages should be developed well ahead of opening. It is critical to integrate the spa into all aspects of the hotel – from cross-selling by front office staff and concierge to in-room brochures and promotions. In this crowded marketplace, a smooth and timely pre-opening process is crucial to maximising financial and operational success.

Dubai spa market outlook

Once considered a luxury, wellness is now becoming part of everyday life – from how people work to how they travel. As the spa and wellness sector continues to grow in the region, hotel spas will have to innovate to adapt to demand from an increasingly price-sensitive customer base and competition from a constant stream of new entrants. Part of the innovation will require greater financial accountability of spas. Spa directors need to be able to accurately measure and consistently monitor the spa’s performance and see how it compares to that of other spas within the market.

Growing well

In the first ever industry benchmark report for wellness spas, Intelligent Spas finds the niche industry poised for growth – and generating more revenue than industry averages. Julie Garrow shares more

The first ever industry benchmark report for wellness spas revealed that wellness spas employ more people, attract a bigger percentage of local residents, and generate more revenue per square metre or square foot compared with all spa types on average.

Produced by independent research company Intelligent Spas, the Wellness Spas Benchmark Report involved a group of 16 selected spas across Europe, Africa, the Middle East and Asia, with an average size of 3,026sq m (32,570sq ft). For the purposes of the research, Intelligent Spas defined a wellness spa as offering a variety of spa treatments and packages incorporating wellness attributes; health and fitness-related services, classes and consultations; and an emphasis on wellness throughout its branding.

How are wellness spas performing financially?
The annual revenue generated in the past financial year averaged US$1.3m (€1.2m, £1m), compared with the industry average of US$690,000 (€635,500, £548,000). On average, 67 per cent of wellness spas’ revenue was generated by treatments, with 4 per cent coming from retail sales.

Annual revenue per square metre was US$857 (€794, £687). And annual expenses per spa amounted to just over 40 per cent of revenue. Wellness spas retained an average of 20.3 employees, significantly higher than the industry average of 14 spa employees retained.

Who visits wellness spas?
Wellness spas welcomed 9,526 guests on average during the past financial year, 46 per cent of whom were return visitors. The gender distribution of those visitors is fairly close, with 56 per cent of visitors being women and 44 per cent being men. This is slightly different from the gender split between visitors to the average spa, where 41 per cent are men and 59 per cent are women.

The largest market segment by age for wellness spas was also quite young, with the coveted 30- to 39-year-old range coming in on top. On average, 63 per cent of wellness spa visitors were local residents and 22 per cent were international tourists, compared with 50 per cent and 27 per cent, respectively, in industry averages. At hotels and resorts, 37 per cent of spa visits were captured from guests staying at the property co-located with the wellness spa.

What does a wellness hotel achieve?
On average, hotels offering wellness spas contain 209 bedrooms and achieved 63 per cent average annual occupancy during the past financial year, with an average...
Wellness spas welcomed an average of 9,526 guests in the past year – 46 per cent were return visitors.
More hotels are incorporating wellness spas, and these new statistics help them better plan and implement the facility as a revenue generator.

- daily rate of US$401 (€372, £322).
- Revenue per available room (RevPAR) for wellness spas was US$159 (€147, £128).

More hotel groups are incorporating wellness spas into their offering, and these new statistics help them better plan and implement the spa facility as a revenue-generating department, as opposed to an assumed, must-have cost centre. A detailed campaign is required to continually entice hotel guests to the spa, thus increasing RevPAR for the hotel business, while generating guest loyalty by providing spa and wellness options.

What is the unique selling proposition of wellness spas?
This was the first time Intelligent Spas incorporated a question about unique selling propositions (USPs) in its spa benchmark survey. This helped us to correctly categorise wellness spas, plus reminded respondents why their spa is special, which helps when promoting their spa in competitive markets. The majority of survey respondents stated their wellness treatments and facilities strongly contributed to their USP.

- 62 per cent of wellness spas offered a hammam or a hammam-style treatment
- 67 per cent offered a relaxing bath experience
- 53 per cent provided consultations for medical-related services, being either conventional and/or complementary
- 80 per cent of spas surveyed stated they offered separate relaxation rooms for females and males

Creating a spa menu that features a range of wellness-inspired experiences is critical to a facility being classified as a wellness spa. Additionally, offering a variety of options, including water experiences and various relaxation areas, is necessary in the physical design of a wellness spa. Relevant marketing items – for example, website content and images – as well as wellness-related campaigns, must be designed to support and reflect the overall wellness concept of the spa.

Outlook for 2017

It looks like an eventful year ahead for wellness spas, as many of the key indicators are predicted to fluctuate. Despite more demand for wellness services – with average visitor numbers forecast to increase by 4.3 per cent per spa – owners and managers of wellness spas believe average revenue per guest could drop by 4.5 per cent. Average revenue per spa is forecast to be stable; however, the number of employees required to operate a wellness spa is set to increase by 4.3 per cent, driving total expenses up by 4.5 per cent year-on-year.

Wellness spas, not dissimilar to any spa type, may manage constant changes in key benchmarks by regularly monitoring them, which enables timely action to be taken to correct areas of the business which need slight improvement. Also, benchmarking gives owners and managers time to pivot the business when it experiences a major disruption, such as a new spa entering their marketplace. ●

The seventh Consumer Snapshot survey, commissioned by the International Spa Association (ISPA) in 2016, focused on the US millennial generation – born between 1980 and 1997 – which represents more than one in four Americans.

PricewaterhouseCoopers (PWC) carried out the online survey, achieving 1,018 responses representative of the regional distribution of the relevant age group – and not targeting spa-goers specifically.

The report concludes that the findings provide “striking evidence that millennials are a huge reservoir of demand for US spas” given that, for the first time in ISPA’s Consumer Snapshot surveys, “spa-goers outnumber non-spa-goers ... with 56 per cent of the millennials surveyed stating they have visited a spa in the past 12 months.” Although already an important market for spas, the vast majority (83 per cent) of millennial spa-goers are “infrequent” visitors – meaning that they visit a spa fewer than five times a year.

Who are millennial spa-goers?
Women represent 54 per cent of this spa-going demographic, while 46 per cent are men. The majority – 64 per cent – are between 25 and 35 years of age, with 34 per cent in the 17 to 25-year bracket. The highest proportion – 62 per cent – lives in the Southwest region of the US.

Spa-goers are more likely to be in employment than non-spa goers (64 per cent versus 52 per cent) and spa-goers are also more likely than non-spa-goers to have a college degree (63 per cent versus 48 per cent).

Male versus female spa-goers
According to the survey, millennial women are more likely to visit a salon spa, while millennial men appear to prefer resort spas or those located within a fitness facility. This correlates with the fact that 21 per cent of male (compared with 9 per cent of female) respondents to the survey said that the key reason for their trip was to relax.

More than half of millennials surveyed have visited a spa in the past 12 months, but the majority have been less than five times in total.

Most recent trip to a spa was to “recover from injury/illness or to soothe sore joints/muscles”. Equally, to “improve my appearance”, “reduce/relieve stress” and “treat myself/indulge” were much more important motivators to women than men.

According to the researchers, the statistics from this study “certainly suggest that the millennial man is out to debunk some of the traditional stereotypes around spa treatments … While manicure and pedicure treatments may have traditionally been seen as the domain of females, this survey rejects that assertion, with more male spa-going millennials claiming to have had a manicure or pedicure (52 per cent) than not (48 per cent). Similarly, well over half (59 per cent) of male respondents state they have had a facial at a spa.”

Corresponding with men’s desire to “recover from injury/illness or to soothe sore joints/muscles”, they are more likely than women to opt for hydrotherapy (43 per cent, versus 28 per cent for women), aromatherapy (51 per cent, versus 43 per cent for women) and a body scrub/wrap (54 per cent, versus 46 per cent).

Millennial males are more likely than females to book their spa appointments online – 29 per cent of men, compared with 20 per cent of women. Men are also more likely to book via social media – 11 per cent, compared with 3 per cent. Millennial women say they prefer to book their appointments either by telephone (49 per cent) or in person (14 per cent).

Millennials and technology

The report authors state that “the data behind this study suggests that millennials are a tech-savvy generation who use [technology] to enhance and simplify their daily lives.” Some 80 per cent of those surveyed agreed that “technology helps me manage tasks more easily”, 71 per cent agreed that “technology leaves a positive footprint on my life”, 68 per cent agreed that technology “improves my overall quality of life”, 63 per cent said they kept their phone close-by all day, and 52 per cent felt they were “connected to technology 24/7”. That is in line with what one would expect from the 17 to 35 age group.

Yet, there are interesting differences between spa-goers and non-spa-goers. On the whole, non-spa-goers find technology less stressful and enjoy using technology more than spa-goers (see Graph 2).

Online engagement
In accordance with this, the survey found that the Internet shopping phenomenon has not infiltrated the spa industry to the same degree as other industries. Further, overall, 40 per cent of spa-goers within this demographic prefer to book their spa appointments by phone, compared with 24 per cent who book online. According to ISPA president Lynne McNees, “booking via phone – or in person – gives you more options to customise your requests, ask questions and explore all available options.”

The Consumer Snapshot survey concludes that, although millennials’ “love for technology is alive and well”, it’s surprising they – especially female spa-goers – are not engaging with spas online a great amount. According to the study, “if the industry is to continue to diversify, perhaps this is something to re-evaluate as spas endeavour to keep pace with millennials’ increasingly important wants and needs.”

Indeed, spas should explore how they can enable spa-goers to obtain more information online and “customise” varying requests to a greater extent than is currently possible. Nevertheless, for some spa experiences, it is likely there will always be a need for human, individual, customised, professional advice. Upselling is certainly easier on a one-to-one basis, where the needs and wants of the customer can be explored in detail. Spas should provide customers with both – equally flexible – options.

1 is “strongly disagree”, 5 is “strongly agree”
Statistics from this study certainly suggest that the millennial man is out to debunk some of the traditional stereotypes around spa treatments.

More male spa-going millennials have had a manicure or pedicure than not, and 59 per cent say they’ve had a facial.
Lessons for spas

The survey looked at why non-spa-goers do not use spas and why the majority (83 per cent) of millennial spa-goers visit a spa less than five times a year and are classified as “infrequent users”.

Cost is the top reason both non-spa-goers and spa-goers give for not visiting or not visiting frequently, and is particularly important to women – both non-spa-goers and spa-goers. Time is the second most important reason given. These two reasons are consistent with the findings of previous studies.

Perhaps spas could consider even greater use of yield management? Reducing prices at quiet times might attract a wider audience and, potentially, boost the frequency of visits. Many spas have already introduced shorter treatments and selling times, rather than specific treatments, thus addressing the “lack of time” concern. Since these are consistent concerns, spas might want to explore other ways to address them.

The survey separated “not comfortable visiting a spa” and “not familiar with a spa environment and/or spa etiquette”, which have been grouped together in Table 1. This is clearly a major concern for non-spa-goers. The researchers noted that, since it is mainly men who feel uncomfortable visiting spas, “the industry would do well to address how millennial men perceive visiting spas … breaking down some of the myths and misconceptions around [the experience]”.

It’s not just men who feel “not familiar” or “not comfortable” visiting spas: it’s a factor cited relatively highly by all millennial categories. This needs to be addressed by spas in their marketing, information and customer service and should be considered in tandem with spas’ technology strategy. The researchers conclude that this “could potentially open up an untapped spring of new patrons who were previously less keen on going to a spa.”

Further feedback

The survey also sought views on what might enhance the spa experience and encourage greater levels of visitation. The availability of refreshments was cited most frequently – by 51 per cent

ISPA’s 2016 US Spa Industry Study shows a healthy growth in revenue, spa visits and profit. Research author Colin McIlheney outlines the findings.

The US spa industry showed continuing growth, profitability and confidence during 2015 and into 2016, according to the 17th annual International SPA Association (ISPA) US Spa Industry Study, conducted by PwC.

The industry’s buoyant performance in 2015 was reflected in a 5 per cent growth in total revenue, along with a 2.1 per cent increase in spa visits compared with 2014. Total revenues passed the US$16bn mark. More than three in four spas reported a profit percentage of 10 per cent or more, while the location count topped 21,000 for the first time since the pre-recession peak in 2008. A majority of spa operators reported plans to take their businesses forward in 2016.

Drawing on the findings from a large-scale nationwide survey of spa operators conducted in spring 2016, the Industry Study provides a picture of the spa industry in 2015. Spas were asked to provide detailed data on their performance in 2015, encompassing five key business indicators. The ‘Big Five’ consists of the number of spa visits by clients, client spending per visit, revenues, staffing and profitability.

Forging ahead

In 2015, the US economy continued to expand. The growth in the level of economic activity nationwide averaged 2.4 per cent in 2015, unchanged from the 2014 rate, with a corresponding rise in personal consumption expenditure, up by 4.7 per cent in cash terms.

The story was similar within the spa industry. Total revenue grew by 5.0 per cent – up from US$15.5bn in 2014 to US$16.3bn in 2015 – driven by a rising number of spa visits (+2.1 per cent), combined with increased revenue per visit (+2.9 per cent) and expansion in the number of spa locations (+1.8 per cent). Visits reached a record 179 million.

New spa openings exceeded closures by a margin of 360 in 2015, bringing the total number of locations up to 21,020 from 20,660 in 2014. This marks the first year that spa locations have topped 21,000 since the pre-recession peak of 21,300 in 2008. Clientele are spending more per visit too; revenue growth.

Source: ISPA 2016 US Spa Industry Study
Interest from demographic groups including men, teens and millennials were cited as helping to fuel growth in the spa industry.

Outpaced the rise in visits, with the average spend per appointment increasing from US$88 in 2014 to US$91 in 2015. Total employment remained broadly stable, at 359,300 in May 2016, compared with 360,000 in May 2015. However, a closer look at the data reveals robust growth in the number of full-time employees (+5.3 per cent) in contrast to a fall in part-time workers (-4.1 per cent). As of May 2016, the number of full-time workers (162,000) was slightly higher than for part-time employees (157,800). This is a reversal of the trend in recent years where the number of part-time staff was rising at a faster pace than the full-time workforce. Time will tell whether this development is temporary, but the increase in full-time positions suggests it could be a response to recent growth in demand. To accommodate, spas are boosting their employee hours.

Independent contractor positions fell over the period from May 2015 to May 2016, from 44,600 to 41,700 (-6.5 per cent). The reduction in the share of employment filled by contractors reflects an ongoing trend dating from 2010.

Profitability remained buoyant in the spa industry across the board. Within the resort/hotel sector, more than three in four spas reported a spa profit percentage in excess of 10 per cent.

Profitable performance
Profitability remained buoyant in the spa industry across the board. Within the resort/hotel sector, more than three in four spas (76 per cent) reported a spa profit percentage in excess of 10 per cent for 2015, representing an improvement on the 2014 position, when 67 per cent reported a profit percentage over 10 per cent. The proportion saying they experienced a net loss was 5 per cent, broadly unchanged from 2014 (6 per cent). Excluding the resort/hotel sector, 76 per cent of spas reported a profit.
percentage of 10 per cent or more in 2015, slightly above the 2014 out-turn (73 per cent). The proportion reporting a net loss dropped to 5 per cent in 2015, from 7 per cent in 2014.

Recent trends: from strength to strength
While the previous 12 months form the primary focus of the study, this annual review also covers more recent trends and experiences, with spa operators asked about their performance during the September 2015 to March 2016 period. The proportion of spa operators reporting increasing revenues and visits was at its highest level since the question was first posed to survey respondents in the 2010 Industry Study. Such a consistent positive response across all spa sectors nationwide indicates that growth in the industry remains on a steady upward path.

Three in four spas (75 per cent) noted an increase in revenue. A similar proportion saw an increase in visits (76 per cent), while 60 per cent said client spending was on a rising trend compared to the same period in the previous year.

Almost three in five spas said that they had increased staffing levels in the past six months compared to the same period in the previous year.

Looking ahead: enhancing the experience
With the signs so encouraging, spas were looking forward with confidence and making plans to improve and enhance the visitor experience in ways that reflect emerging industry trends.

The overwhelming majority of spas were confident that revenues would continue to increase in 2016. Almost nine in 10 spas were ‘confident’ or ‘very confident’ about the next six months.

When asked about their plans for 2016, 81 per cent said they would be adding or creating new treatment offerings. Complementing those plans, 61 per cent of spas said they would be introducing new product lines, and 58 per cent planned to create a new spa menu.

Spas also planned on taking measures to ensure they had the capacity to take their business forward in 2016, with 66 per cent saying they intended to add or create new employee training opportunities. More than one in two spas (55 per cent) said they planned to create new job opportunities in 2016. A new spa or expansion of an existing spa was mentioned by 45 per cent of spas.

On the marketing front, 38 per cent of spas intended to create new branding. More than one in three planned to enhance or forge new community partnerships to reach more potential clients.

Survey respondents were also asked to give their views on what they thought the next big new trends to shape the spa industry over the next year or so would be. The most frequently identified developments related to wellness, health and fitness, accounting for 38 per cent of survey responses, with corporate wellness also presenting opportunities within the resort and hotel sectors.
Almost three in five spas said they had increased staffing levels in the past six months.

Complementing the focus on wellbeing, 18 per cent of spas cited the move towards organic and natural products and treatments. Other trends included technological advances in skincare (cited by 9 per cent of respondents), convenient on-demand spa services (cited by 6 per cent), healthy ageing (cited by 4 per cent) and interest from demographic groups such as men, teens and millennials (cited by 4 per cent).

Despite rising labour costs, hotel spa revenue is showing strong growth, according to the latest edition of CBRE’s Trends® in the Hotel Spa Industry. Mark VanStekelenburg outlines the key findings.

For the first time in 10 years, hotel spa department revenue grew at a faster pace than other sources of hotel revenue, according to the 2016 edition of CBRE’s Trends® in the Hotel Spa Industry. The report reveals that US hotel spa departments were able to increase their revenue by 5.6 per cent between 2014 and 2015. This compares with a 3.3 per cent increase in rooms revenue and a 5.5 per cent increase in total hotel revenue for the properties that were included in the survey sample, for the same time period.

Significantly, these figures mark the first time since the 2007 edition of the publication that spa revenue growth has surpassed rooms revenue growth.

CBRE Hotels’ Americas Research is projecting modest gains in rooms revenue for the next few years, as the US lodging industry operates at the top of the business cycle. Therefore, hotel operators will need to look at other operated departments – like spa – to accelerate total hotel revenue growth.

At the same time, health and wellness is becoming an increasingly important component of everyday life. Though historically considered an exclusively high-end hotel amenity, the integration of

Historical performance

In 2015, spa department revenue averaged US$4,284 per available room (PAR), surpassing the 2005 average of US$4,200 PAR, but below the 2007 peak of US$4,838 PAR. Spa department expenses averaged US$3,217 PAR, close to 2005’s US$3,220 PAR. The trend is similar for spa department profits, which averaged US$1,067 PAR in 2015, above 2005’s US$980 PAR and close to the 2006 average of US$1,090 PAR.

Spa catches up

During the Great Recession, spa department revenue was hit harder than other hotel revenues, extending the time needed for revenue to recover. It wasn’t until 2015 that spa revenue growth exceeded the pace of rooms revenue growth, signalling that the spa department is finally catching up in its recovery, following the 2008 recession. Spa profits have seen double-digit growth every year since 2010, with the exception of more modest growth in 2012.
Strong profit growth
While hotel spa department revenue is showing relatively strong growth, hotel spa department profits are increasing at an even greater pace. In 2015, hotel spa managers were able to convert the 5.6 per cent increase in revenues into a strong 17.7 per cent boost in department profits. They were able to achieve such strong gains in profits because they controlled their expenses; from 2014 to 2015, the combination of cost of goods sold, labour costs and other operating expenses increased by just 2.1 per cent.

Labour costs comprise approximately three-quarters of operating expenses for a hotel spa. Given the surge in labour costs that we’ve seen in recent years, spa managers should be commended for achieving such strong flow-through within their departments. In fact, it was a reduction in other operating expenses that offset the 5.8 per cent increase in labour costs and allowed hotel spas to achieve such a strong growth in profits.

A bright future
Recent economic reports have indicated increases in retail sales, auto sales, building materials and health and beauty products. This is an indication that people are spending on themselves and bodes well for travel. Additional research shows that travellers are more mindful of their wellbeing when choosing their lodging. Hotels have an opportunity to take advantage of this trend, not just by promoting their spas, but also by offering other health and wellness amenities and services throughout the hotel.

As an increasing number of people are travelling, the demographics are changing, causing hotel companies to refocus their offerings to ensure they’re meeting the needs of their guests. Leisure and group travel are also on the rise, and hotels must strive to make sure the health and wellness needs of these different guests are addressed. Hotel companies are creating programmes – and even entire brands – with a focus on providing the consumer with the basics of health and wellness. The future looks bright for the hotel spa industry.

To provide a memorable wellness experience, GPSA considers all customers’ senses. The company’s experience of project development, spa management and investors’ focus is key to avoiding the usual traps found in many spa businesses. This ensures the creation of compelling and differentiating concepts aligned with a business strategy, not ‘nice but empty’ places.

USPs
Using our design philosophy, we create design that is perceived through the five senses: sight, smell, taste, touch and sound. We believe that by engaging those senses through our work, the architectural experience becomes a memorable journey for everyone. Our design philosophy is driven by 2 basic principles: 1) the design solution must creatively enhance our client’s philosophy and culture. 2) Our solution must answer the client’s financial and time constraints. Through close communication with our clients, coupling focused research with creative solutions, RDHA has produced award-winning projects. RDHA has highly experienced professionals who are able to guide our clients through the design process.

The project includes a complete reworking of the existing spa and a three story extension providing new pool, thermal suite, relaxation and treatment zones linking through to a stunning spa Garden designed by Ann-Marie Powell.

Sparcstudio is continuing its work with Center Parcs across many sites and is also working on plans for the exciting spa at the new site in Ireland.

Background

Biologique Recherche was founded by a French family of passionate skincare experts. Today, it is owned by Rupert Schmid, Pierre-Louis Delapalme and by the founding Allouche family. They remain loyal to the brand’s fundamentals, ensuring the transmission of its unique methodology and results-driven personalised approach.

Main products and services

The company’s R&D team is driven by bringing unique products to market. One of the recent innovations is Seconde Peau, a treatment inspired by the medical processes used to treat severely burned patients. Biologique Recherche also provides spas with communication and marketing tools that help them develop their businesses.

USPs

Biologique Recherche’s best asset is its methodology, which combines powerful products and effective treatment procedures with respect for the skin’s structure and physiology to ensure results.

It took 40 years to build this rigorous, complex methodology and it can only be passed on through intensive training.

The company’s hyper-customised solutions target a client’s individual needs and this makes Biologique Recherche the brand of choice for the most discerning clientele.

The manufacturing process is responsible in part for the effectiveness of the formulations as there is no mass production and every batch receives great attention.

Biologique Recherche products contain a high concentration of botanical, marine and biological extracts – they account for more than 20 per cent in most products. The company chooses the highest quality active ingredients available and cold-made formulations to preserve their structure.

Finally, to preserve integrity and decrease the chance of allergic reactions in the use of products, artificial fragrances are not used.

Background
Bernard Massing founded the company as Madislor in 1976, developing innovative products for the hygiene market in the workshop next to his family house.

In the 1990s, a customer from Paris asked whether it was possible for him to create sauna scents and the company began to develop expertise in essential oils and aromas.

Main products and services
Laboratoires Camylle has developed a range of products based on essential oils and natural plant extracts for use in spas.

They are designed for use in saunas, steamrooms, hydrotherapy tubs, whirlpools, experience showers, crushed ice fountains and traditional bathtubs, as well as being ideal for use in essential oils diffusers.

Camylle also produces a range of precious oils for use in massage treatments and for perfume diffusion. They contribute a new, olfactory dimension to the wellness area.

Fragrances include eucalyptus, orange blossom, pine, lavender, rosemary, mint and lemon, as well as Asian, Polynesian, Mediterranean and Oriental blends.

USPs
We recognise that wet zones in spas are often underexploited, despite the fact they represent the biggest area of investment.

Enlivening and revitalising wet areas by introducing aroma makes them a draw for customers, thanks to aromatherapy.

It is possible to organise special ‘aroma’ events which are delivered on a daily, weekly or seasonal basis. These events can highlight to customers the special properties of the oils, which can be slimming, soothing or uplifting.

When these events are marketed effectively, they put the spa’s wet areas at the heart of the operation and bring them to life to create more customer engagement and interest in visiting the spa. They can also help to boost the spa’s retail offer.

Where in the world?
Laboratoires Camylle has clients in Europe, Switzerland, Russia, Japan, Singapore, the US, Morocco and Turkey.

Future plans
In 2017, Laboratoires Camylle will launch a revolutionary new concept which will enable the creation of an “olfactory identity” for spa treatment rooms.

What the clients say
“For over a year now, all our centres use Camylle products in their Turkish baths. We welcome customers for a stay of 6 days and being able to offer a different fragrance in our hammams every day is a real plus.

“We can enliven the bathing areas with the scents, so our clients can discover the benefits of these complementary aromas to their treatment. We have a very high client satisfaction rating since the introduction of these excellent professional quality products from Camylle.”

Main services
Comphy is the spa industry’s inventor and leading provider of luxury linens. Mia Richardson founded Comphy in 2003, when she noticed a need in the spa industry for visually pleasing yet cost effective table dressings that would satisfy the most discerning spa guests.

Additional services
Known for innovation, Comphy products were developed specifically for spa – offering the best in durability, sustainability, design and quality. For more than 10 years, Comphy has been the leading manufacturer of sheets and bedding sets for spas, lodging, wellness and home. We offer everything to dress your spa table from basics such as sheets, blankets, comforters, table skirts, cradle covers, duvets, and more to accessories – including decorative pillows, saddles, knit blankets, robes and towels.

USPs
Prior to the launch of Comphy, spas were typically using hotel or home linens for treatment tables, often having to pin or fold them to fit the table. Our founder, Mia Richardson, spent years doing research and development to create the most innovative and luxurious linens imaginable – designed to withstand the rigors of spa operations while providing a soft, lush feel.

Comphy quickly earned a reputation for the best in durability, sustainability, design and quality. We continue to develop the most efficient yet luxurious spa linens by listening to customers on how to improve or introduce new products. Comphy’s high-performance microfibre uses less energy than any alternative, lasts 2-3 times longer than a standard cotton sheet and is wrinkle free.

Background

Fabio Alemanno Design is a family-owned company with more than 40 years’ experience in architectural stone-masonry. At our factory in the south of Italy we combine traditional craftsmanship with cutting-edge technologies for the development and manufacture of our heated loungers and treatment tables.

We also design, manufacture and realise high-end construction projects using marble, natural- and semi-precious stone. Our marketing, showroom and logistics operations are located out at our offices in the UK and Germany.

Main products and services

Our heated marble lounge chairs are the acknowledged gold standard in luxury hotel, spa and residential design. The proven therapeutic benefits of long-wave infrared, together with the technological superiority of our products, makes them the first choice for discerning clients around the world.

Cut from a single block of flawless marble, Fabio Alemanno heated lounge chairs are pieces of modern art with an intimate usefulness no marble sculpture could ever achieve. Ergonomically shaped and unique in their design and structure, the chairs combine wellness with design and technology, offering unparalleled comfort and an amazing relaxation experience.

Their regenerative warmth will pamper your guests, whether in the spa or the intimacy of the suite, making their stay unforgettable.

Unlimited choices of marble, exotic wood, leather and fabrics enable a perfect and seamless integration into any environment, while offering architects and interior designers endless possibilities for customisation.

Additional products

As well as the design and manufacturing of our heated marble lounge chairs and tables, we offer bespoke marble and natural stone-masonry services for the hotel, spa and residential markets.

USPs

Based on ancient knowledge – and confirmed by scientific research – warmth is one of the most important sources of healing and preventative therapy available.

Warmth is a long wave infrared and as well as the sun, it is radiated by the soil (mud therapy), by the sand (sand bath therapy) and by the marble and other mineral rocks (including hammam and hot stone therapies).

Our heated lounge chairs combine the healing properties of natural stone with the therapeutic effects of long-wave infrared rays. An integrated, controllable electrical system warms the lounger from within, the warmth radiating through the stone. This provides many health benefits – such as stress reduction, detoxification and the treatment of muscular and osteopathic injuries.

The loungers use a variable-tilt technology, which creates the perfect inclination and delivers an almost zero-gravity effect – all with the body fully supported.

A flexible, responsive three-zone heating system ensures optimal temperature regulation and the loungers can be easily moved thanks to integrated castors.

With an easy-to-clean surface, Fabio Alemanno lounge chairs can be used for a wide range of applications at spas, in hotels and in residential projects.

Background
The company was founded in Radebeul, Saxony in 1945. Thomas Lux is the son of the founder Herbert Lux and has been managing director since 1975. Since 1996 Rolf Longrée has also served as managing director of Lux Elements.

Main products and services
Lux Elements is an experienced specialist in the production of polystyrene hard foam and in processing products for the sanitary and wellness markets. The emphasis is on: wall cladding, floor structures, bathroom upgrading and wellness facilities.

Lux Elements is able to produce individual concepts and prefabricated elements for health resorts and leisure facilities.

The company produces solutions according to customer specifications including wet areas. These can be individual or serial productions.

USPs
One of the key USPs of Lux Elements is the environmentally friendly production of polystyrene hard foam (EPS) without using climate-harming propellants on its own production facility. The self-manufactured, moisture-resistant material has, among others, one important material property which makes it ideal for use in spas and wellness centres: due to the alkaline properties, the elements are mold resistant.

A further strength of Lux Elements is the individual production according to customer requirements. There are no limits in designing.

The modern and flexible manufacturing methods make it possible to produce large objects and diverse forms. On request the company can supply the static calculation, especially for very large objects.

Where in the world?
Lux Elements distributes its products all over Europe, Asia, North America, Russia and Ukraine.

Future plans
Expand markets in North America and Southeast Asia and establishment of new products for steam room constructions, for example: installation panels for attachment of fittings, hard-plastic supporting panels for steam inlets and new light strips for niches or benches.

Background
The Madison Collection was launched in 1999 by industry expert Charmaine Lang to provide quality, reliable and innovative products. From its headquarters in Miami, Florida, USA, the company works with leading hotels and spas around the world and is renowned for providing impeccable linens with an emphasis on operational use.

Main products and services
The Madison Collection creates superior towels and robes, as well as bath and spa accessories that provide comfort, absorbency and durability for operator and client.

By combining quality, lightweight terry and luxurious weaves, The Madison Collection offers innovative products to a global clientele.

The company’s collections are well thought out to provide ease of use on-site. Towels and robes to be used at the pool and beach, sauna, spa and in-room each feature a different pattern, so laundry staff may easily identify delivery zones. This also allows for the simple separation of operating revenues for various areas on property.

The Madison Collection’s products are washed and dried four times after dyeing, before cutting and sewing to ensure fibres are chemical-free, thus resulting in minimal shrinkage – under four per cent, compared to the industry standard of 10 per cent. Because of the company’s superior cotton and sophisticated dyeing process, its products last more than 300 washes – and have been tested up to 527 washes.

USPs
The Madison Collection goes to great lengths to provide partners with the finest products. Customers reap the benefits of the company’s environmental safety efforts.

Created at the same factory since the company’s inception, all products utilise the best cotton (grade 5.5 - 6.5) and dyes.

The Madison Collection takes its place in the industry – and the world – seriously. Its factory is one of the few where spinning, weaving, dyeing, cutting and sewing takes place in one location, therefore ensuring supreme quality as well as little to no environmental impact.

The Madison Collection is also celebrated for its exceptional service and likes customers to help tell its story. One of The Madison Collection’s favorite accolades is that clients liken working with the company to the VIP attention received with private banking.

USPs

However, these silos of guest information scattered across your various operations fragments your offer. With ResortSuite’s integrated design, you have a full, clear picture of every guest across the property. Whether a property is looking to replace all systems, or already has standard systems in place like Opera or HMS for Property Management, ResortSuite can still provide seamless integration across the property’s operation by offering robust interfaces between systems. Extended architecture including WEB and MOBILE allows guests to book their entire experience online in real-time.

Background
RICE FORCE is a high-end, moisturising skin care line from Japan. The company was established in Kagawa prefecture and has been manufacturing since 2000 in Yushin sake brewery – which boasts a legacy of more than 150 years. The cutting edge, deep moisturising skin care we produce is recognised by millions of customers.

Main products and services
RICE FORCE offers a complete spa menu of customised body care treatments, advanced facial treatments – using ancient Japanese massage techniques and patented active ingredient Rice Power Extract – and a wide variety of treatment enhancements.

During facial treatments we focus on anti-ageing effects, relaxation and solving issues with problematic skin.

Body treatments offer maximal relaxation, tension relief and amazing skin results thanks to the Japanese white rice we use, which is believed to have a mysterious power to beautify the skin.

All of our bespoke treatments commence and complete with our signature opening and closing ritual. Our highly qualified RICE FORCE trainers will provide professional training and education to a spa’s team of therapists. Customised signature rituals can be designed especially to cater to a spa’s specific concept.

USPs
The beautifying power behind RICE FORCE skin care products lies with rice power extract, a natural ingredient high in amino acids gained by the fermentation process. Each extracted formula is numbered and categorised, and has different characteristics.

Rice Power Extract No.11 has a super-low molecular weight, so it absorbs deeper into the skin where it improves moisture retention capacity. This function was certified by the Japanese government in 2001.

In addition to very effective skin care products, RICE FORCE brings a new style of a service which embodies the traditional Omotenashi - decades of exclusive focus on luxury Japanese hospitality.

RICE FORCE is a perfect solution for spa operators who are looking for something new and special for their clients.

Background
Conceived by spa industry specialist Régis Boudon-Doris in 2014, YouSPA is the first worldwide spa social platform that connects spas with spa guests from across the globe in just one click. With a collection of spas in categories such as luxury, hotel, resort, wellness, medical, and day spas, along with rich digital content and detailed search parameters, potential spa guests easily find spas, book services, and purchase gift certificates through one click on the YouSPA website or APP. Spas join YouSPA for free and have access to business services and a network of industry experts to increase bookings, revenue, and profit.

The concept was created with the intention of bringing a unique worldwide wellness technology to the market as a way to make it simple for guests to find and book spa services while providing an opportunity for spas to increase revenue.

Main products and services
YouSPA is the online social destination for spas around the world to connect with spa enthusiasts. Spas join YouSPA for free, complete a spa profile and may select optional memberships to gain visibility, connect with customers, enable booking of spa services, feature purchase of gift certificates, and more. Spas gain insider access to business services to increase their profitability and client loyalty with exclusive opportunities.

USPs
The mission of YouSPA is to become the destination for spa guests and spas around the world. To do this, we build our offer around five key pillars:

- YouSPA Profile, giving spas full autonomy and control of features viewed by users
- YouSPA Search Engine, giving potential customers more than 100 search parameters to choose the spa that best meets their needs
- YouSPA Magazine, featuring spa and wellness articles for guests to gain insight and inspiration for health and wellbeing
- YouSPA Review, which is the first worldwide spa social network for spa guests to review spa experiences, connect with spas, and engage with other spa enthusiasts
- YouSPA App, which greatly improves the customer experience for smart phone and tablet users and enables spas to quickly fill their available appointments and promote last minute treatment offers

Coming soon will be the sixth key pillar: YouSPA Booking, the first worldwide online spa reservation service, connected in real time with your spa booking software system!

Where in the world?
With more than 3,000 spas in more than 50 countries and growing, YouSPA will continue worldwide market expansion along with the creation of YouSPA USA, with our American partners to launch in this strategic market.

Future plans
Much of our focus will concentrate on introducing YouSPA to new markets, and for spas to connect with a YouSPA Manager in their part of the world – who understands their specific needs.

Our innovative digital and social media strategies to promote spas will continue to ensure that consumers are fully engaged in all our social media and brand activity.

With the current platform available in more than four languages, YouSPA plans to double the portal languages.

Throughout the next year we will launch new services and features to continue our tech revolution for worldwide spas.

The nail polishes feature Orly’s Breathable formula, that is permeable to water and oxygen, and allows nails to breathe. Practicing Muslim women have previously had to avoid wearing nail polish as it creates a barrier, which causes issues during wudu, an Islamic purification ritual where parts of the body, including the hands and nails, are cleansed with sacred water before prayer. The breathable formula allows water to pass through the layer of polish, making it less of a barrier to wudu. The capsule collection features five coloured polishes, in nude, berry, red, rose-gold and white.
